

John Adams Aibrary.

IN THE CUSTODY OF THE BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY.

THE John Adums

HISTORY

OF THE

Knights Hospitallers

O F

St. JOHN of JERUSALEM,

Styled afterwards,

The KNIGHTS of Rhodes,

And at present,

The KNIGHTS of MALTA.

Translated from the French of Monf. L'Abbé de Vertor.

VOLUME V.

For A. Kincald and A. Donaldson, Yair and Fleming, and W. Grav, Bookfellers.

M.DCC.LVII.

* ADAMS165.4

HISTORY

OFTHE

Knights Hospitallers

O F

St. JOHN of JERUSALEM,

Called afterwards

The KNIGHTS of Rhodes,

And at present

The KNIGHTS of MALTA.

BOOK XIII.

HOUGH the taking of Fort St. Elmo had cost the infidels one of their generals, and the choicest of their troops, yet, nevertheless, great as their loss was, that of the order, in the vigorous defence it made, was not less considerable in proportion. 'Tis computed that one hundred and thirty knights, and above one thousand three hundred men lost their lives in this particular siege; and the cruclties which the Turks had exercised at the conclusion of it, had thrown the rest into a kind of consternation. The grand master was sensibly afflicted at so great a Vol. V.

lofs, but very prudently diffembled his concern; and, in order to encourage some knights, whom he observed to be feized with a kind of terror, he fummoned a general and extraordinary affembly of all fuch knights as could be spared from their posts, and who could attend without prejudice to the fecurity of the place. When appearing among them with his usual constancy, and a magnanimity that was superior to all events, he began his discourse with a panegyric upon those knights who had been killed on this occasion, afferting, that as they had generously sacrificed their lives in defence of the faith, they had lived enough for their glory and their falvation. He went on in recommending their zeal and courage to the affembly, as a fit pattern for them to imitate; and in order to intpire them with recruited ardour, and animate them with greater confidence, he represented to them, that the knights whom they had loft, had not been so much overcome by the valour, as overwhelmed by the multitudes of infidels; but that now the number of their merciles enemies was confiderably diminished; that their army was wasting away continually with the bloody flux, and other contagious distempers with which it was infected; that they began to be in want of ammunition and provisions, and that though they had fent to the coasts of Africa, to Greece, and into the archipelago for fresh supplies, yet they had no news of the return of their ships; neither did the fort which they had taken give them any manner of advantage over the town and other fortresses which were situated at a distance from it; that all the forces of the order were shut up in these places; that succours might be thrown into them without any difficulty; and, in fine, that he hoped either to give the Turks battle, or to make them all lose their lives before the bastions and other fortifica-

THIS discourse, which he pronounced with an heroic affurance, the fire which sparkled in his eyes, and the sense they had of his valour and capacity, all these circumstances raised the spirits, and confirmed the confidence of the affembly, and not a knight of them but protefted folemnly, that he would fight to the Lift drop of his blood for the defence of the illand, and the prefervation of the order.

fidence

'Twas with a fenfible pleasure that the grand master perceived all his knights inspired with the same sentiments as himself; and, in order to animate the common foldiers with the fame bravery, he vifited every post, when, addressing himself to them with a familiarity that was very engaging; "We are, fays he, (my " brave comrades) the foldiers of the LORD JESUS as " well as you, and if you should have the misfortune " to lofe us and all your officers, I am thoroughly " perfuaded, that you will fill fight on with the same " intrepidity and resolution, and that your own cou-" rage will in that case supply the defect of orders." Therefore, to reinforce and raise the considence of his troops, he drew four companies out of the Notable city, which was in less danger from the Turks, and brought them into the Town. He chose, at the same time, four of the principal commanders, whom he made captains of referve, to be ready to run on all occasions to such places as should be most in danger. Each of these commanders had ten knights, subject to his particular orders, who were to serve in quality of aids de camp; and he afterwards nominated three others to act as scripeant-majors of the place. Although he had got'a prodigious quantity of provisions, yet he took care of their being distributed with occonomy, and ordered all the corn and wine that was in private hands to be brought into the public magazines, paying the price thereof to the proprietors.

AFTER these regulations, so truly worthy of a great general, his next step was to forbid the making of any prisoners for the future, giving express orders, that, after having got out of them all the informations possible relating to the basha's designs, they would put them all to the sword, and not give them the least quarter. The motive of this rigour was, not only to show the Turks that they durst revenge the cruelties which they had exercised upon the knights of the fort, but likeways to put his own foldiers and the inhabitants, whatever extremes they might be reduced to, out of all hopes of capitulating, and to make them sensible, that their own preservation and that of the place were inseparable.

THE basha, who knew nothing of this desperate resolution, and vainly flattered himself that the grand mafter and the knights, startled at their late loss, might hearken to a capitulation with pleasure, sent an officer with a white flag to the gate of the town. He had with him a Christian flave, in quality of an interpreter, and had orders to try if the grand master was disposed to enter into a negotiation; but he was refused admittance into the town. The flave however, who had ferved thirty years on board the grand feignior's gallies, was admitted in, and brought to Ia Valette, whom he met in the great iquare; but, at the first word he mentioned about capitulating, the grand mafter, without hearing a fyllable more, ordered him to be immediately hanged. However, he privately told the knight, who was appointed to fee his execution performed, that he should only frighten him with it, and that when he had got from him all possible informations relating to the state of the Turkish army, and the defign of the basha, he should afterwards let him go.

They found that this flave was a poor fellow, feventy years old, whom they had released from the gallies for the sake only of sending him upon so dangerous a commission, and that he was entirely ignorant of the projects of the Turkish general. They offered to keep him with them in the town; but as he was perfuaded that the insidels would soon be masters of it, when he was afraid he should be treated as a deserter, he chose rather to return back to his slavery, than to have only a taste, as he thought, of a precarious liberty, which, if he should lose a second time, would be attended with the most dreadful torments; for which reasons he desired leave to be gone. The knight, who had

had orders to let him out of town, led him through feveral lines of foldiers, who had been commanded to appear there under arms; and when he had conducted him to the counterfearp, he shewed him the bulwarks and bastions of the place, when pointing particularly to the ditch, which was very deep, "See there, "fays he to him, the only spot we can afford the bas" sha, and we reserve it in order to bury him in it, "with all his janizaries."

THE basha saw plainly, by the bold answer which he had given the flave, that there would be no reducing the island but by force of arms. He therefore ordered his troops to invest, on the land side, the castle of St. Angelo, the town, and the peninfula de la Sangle, which formerly went by the name of the town and castle of St. Michael, all situated upon two necks of land that run out into the great port, and which are divided from one another only by a channel, that ferved for a port appropriated to the gallies of the order. The army of the infidels extended itself from the hill or rock of Coradia, and from Bormole, a kind of fort contiguous to the town of St. Michael, as far as mount St. Margaret, and the Belvedera, where the basha had fixed his own quarters. They then began to open the trenches, and in fuch places as they could not dig, by reason of the hardness of the rock, the basha made them build walls of dry stone. He relolved to batter at one and the same time the town and the peninsula on which the castle of St. Michael, then called the Isle de la Sangle, stood; for which purpose the christian slaves were employed in drawing feventy pieces of heavy cannon to the feveral places where he proposed to erect his batteries, of which at last he had no less than nine.

WHILST the Turks were thus busied in carrying on their works, Don John de Cardonna before mentioned, who commanded the four gallies which were sent with succours, appeared again near Malta, in order to endeavour to learn, pursuant to his instructions, if Fort St. Elmo still held out. He had before made some attempts to land his men; but the bad weather, or perhaps the fear with which he was seized, had rendered them ineffectual; but now he put colonel Robles, and the chevalier de Quiney ashore, with a small party for their guard. The colonel, out of complaisance to the fentiments of his general, had constantly maintained, in all the councils of war, that it would be imposfible for them to take too much precaution about a landing, and was on that account highly in his confidence. They were no fooner come ashore, but they were informed by some poor inhabitants, who had hid themselves in the holes of the neighbouring rocks, that the fort was loft. This was enough to make him reimbark without more ado, but the chevalier de Quiney earnestly diffuading from it, and his own courage inspiring him with a resolution of contributing to the relief of Malta, he resolved to conceal the truth from Don John, and to engage him to land immediately the troops that were on board his gallies. With this view, and for fear lest his foldiers should, at their return, acquaint Don John with the loss of the fort, he sent them to the Notable city, which was of easy access, under pretence of bringing guides and horses from thence, in order to conduct the fuccours to the town; by the same express he informed the governor, that he was going to land the troops in the road of Pietra Nigra, that he should detain the soldiers who should deliver him his letter, and fend him other guides to lead the fuccours to the town, with conveniencies to carry the bag-After this he went on board again with Quiney, and both of them joined in telling the general an useful untruth, affuring him that the fort still held out, but that they had been informed there was no hopes of faving it without immediate fuccours; for which reafon they had fent the foldiers to the city, in order to bring them carriages from thence. Cardonna, still unrefolved what to do, would fain have put off the landing a little longer, but the knights, and about forty gentlemen that were on board his galley, exclaimed for much against it, and the very soldiers discovered so much much eagerness and zeal to be fighting with the infidels, that Don John out of fear of their resentment, and of his being exposed to the reproach of the world, by the complaints which they threatned to make against him, was forced to put them ashore. Accordingly they landed in the creek of Pietra Nigra, and Cardonna had no sooner discharged this part of his commission, but he sailed with his four gallies for Sicily.

The difficulty was how to get this small succour into the town, the insidels having invested and blocked it up on the land side. The grand master having advice of their landing from Metquita, had sent them guides to conduct them through by-roads to the port or road Della Scala, with assurances that they would meet with boats ready to transport them safe over to the town. They set out immediately, and, taking the advantage of a great fog, they got safe to the port Della Scala, without being discovered; when getting on board, they crossed the great port, and arrived at the town, where they were welcomed by the knights and soldiers, with all the expressions of joy that were due to their zeal, and answerable to the want they stood in of such a reinforcement.

THE isle de la Sangle, with the castle and town, which was the weakest part of it, and that against which the Turks employed their greatest efforts, was the post which colonel Robles and the generality of the knights and fecular gentlemen, earnestly follicited the grand master to give them; who accordingly at their requests were sent thither. They had planted several batteries at the hermitage, and on mount Sceberras, which played continually on the place, and another was raised upon mount Coradin, which lay so high, that it commanded it like a cavalier, so that they from thence, could easily see everything that passed within. The basha, in order to straiten it still more, made an intrenchment before the Coradin rock, of a height fufficient to cover those who were posted there. The befieged were now shut up on all fides, except towards the port and the sea: the basha therefore, in order to cut off this communication, which might be of fervice to them in introducing fuccours, and to invest the Christians on all fides, proposed, in a council of war, the attacking of the great Spur, on the point of the Penin-For the execution of this project, they were under an absolute necessity of bringing a considerable number of boats, well armed and provided with foldiers, into the great port; but they represented to him, that, belides the chain which went cross the mouth of the port, it would be impossible for those boats to make their way without their being exposed to the danger of being shattered to pieces and sunk by the artillery of the castle of St. Angelo, which commanded and played upon all that part of the port : fo that they would have given over the defign, had not the Turkish admiral found out a way to bring the boats into the great port, without their passing under the castle of St. Angelo. As he was mafter of port Musset, which was divided from the great port only by the neck of land of mount Sceberras, on which the fort of St. Elmo flood, he undertook to make the Christian slaves, and the crew of his gallies, draw a sufficient number of boats cross this neck of land, by the strength of their arms, and to launch them in the great port; after which, they might put a body of foldiers and arquebusiers on board them, in order to attack the Spur on the fide towards the mills, at the same time that the land army should attempt a storm on that side where the castle lay.

The council highly applauded this expedient, the which, as the knights had been no ways apprehensive of it, might probably have occasioned the loss of those works, had it not been for a Turkish officer, a Christian, and a Greek by birth, who having been present at the council, and being touched with a sudden remorfe of conscience, was resolved to get over to the island, and to run the hazard of his life in giving the governor notice of it. This officer was called Lascaris, of the illustrious house of that name, which had given several emperors to the east. The Turks, at the taking of Patras, a town of the Morea, had made him a flave, at a time when he was fo very young, that he was hardly fensible of the misery of his condition. They brought him up in the Turkish religion, and out of some regard to his high extraction, great care was taken of his education. He served in his early youth among the Spahi, and by his valour, had raised himself to the first posts in that body of cavalry. His thoughts had perhaps hitherto been employed only in the making of his fortune, but the fight of Malta, ready to fink under the power of the infidels, revived in his memory the indelible character of a Christian, which he had received at his baptism. The heroic valour, of which the knights daily gave fuch distinguished proofs, raised his compassion; and he could not forbear reproaching himfelf for fighting on the fide of barbarians, who had put most of the princes of his family to death, and had forced the rest, since the taking of Constantinople, to fly for refuge into foreign countries. Full of these different reflections, he goes down to the sea side, to a place that lay directly opposite to the Spur of St. Michael, where waving his turbant, he made figns for them to fend a boat to carry him over to the island. A knight named Savoguerre, who commanded at the point of the fort, feeing by the rich cloaths he had on, that he was a confiderable officer, gave immediate advice of it to the grand mafter, and defired leave to fend a skiff for him, which was readily granted. But before the foldier, whom he had dispatched to the town, could return, some Turks observing Lascaris making his signals, and judging from thence that he intended to defert, and go over to the Christians, they ran to seize him. Though he scarce knew how to swim, he yet, to prevent his being taken, threw himself into the sea; and of two inevitable dangers, he preferred that in which he might possibly be succoured. Savoguerre, who had never taken his eyes off him, observing from the other fide the difficulty he had to cross over, immediately fent off three Maltefe, who were excellent swimmers, who came up to him when his strength was almost exhausted, and by their assistance he got safe to fhore.

shore. After they had made him throw up the water he had swallowed, they conducted him to the grand master, whom he acquanited with the basha's and admiral's projects, and shewed, at the same time, the several places where they proposed to erect their batteries. The grand master, who was thoroughly sensible of the great importance of these advices, extelled the generous resolution he had taken to hazard his life for the safety of the Christians, and therefore settled a large pension on him; and Lascaris, during the time the siege lasted, made it manifest, by his bravery and counsels, that he had no way degenerated from the virtue of his ancestors.

THE grand mafter was at first struck with the admiral's bold and difficult defign; but afterwards recovering from his furprise, he set himself about defeating the fuccess of it. For this end, he fortified all those places towards the port, where the Turks, by the help of their boats, might possibly make a descent. He likewise ordered the walls of the town of St. Michael to be raifed higher, and lined the shore with several pieces of cannon, in order to clear the port of every enemy that should appear. As their chief business was to hinder the Turks from advancing up to the walls of St. Michael, the grand master proposed that affair to the council; but as their opinions were different, and that he was perfuaded that even men, though of the greatest capacity, do not yet see into every thing, he did not disdain to consult two Maltese pilots, whom he had ever found to be, not only men of great capacity and experience in naval affairs, but who had likewife discovered the greatest zeal and fidelity for the order. He told them the design of Turkish admiral, and asked them what they thought was to be done, in order to defeat it, and hinder the embarkation of the troops, which they had drawn down to the shore of mount Sceberras in the isle de la Sangle. Both the pilots agreed in opinion, and told him, that it would be proper to make a staccado with piles drove into the sea, from the Coradin rock to the Spar, which was at the point of the ifle, and to fix iron rings to the top of these piles, and draw a long chain across to stop up the spaces between them: and whereas it would not be possible to drive in the piles in some places, by reason of the depth of the water, or the hardness of the rocky bottom, it would be necessary for them, in that case, to stop up the passage with their longest sail-yards and mass nailed together, which, with the chain, would make it altogether impracticable.

point

The grand master laying their proposal before the council, it was unanimously approved of, and accordingly they set to work about it the night following. La Valette, who plainly perceived the great use of such a staccado, gave orders for the making of others, to hinder any landing on the side of the posts of England, Germany, and the great infirmary. He likewise secured the post for the gallies with an iron chain, which was defended by several batteries on both sides. As the Turkish artillery did not allow them to carry on these works in the day time, they could only work at them by night: but the grand master, knowing of what importance they would be, employed so many hands about them, that in nine nights time all these staccado's and defences were sinished.

THE basha was strangely surprised to see so many works rise up as it were on a sudden out of the sea, to oppose the passage of his boats and the descent of his troops; but as he was a man of true courage and great abilities, he would not give over his first project, and fancied he could find a way to carry off some of the piles of the staccado, and by that means open a passage for his little fleet through the several gaps. For this end, some Turks, with axes at their girdles, swam, by his orders, to the pallifado, got upon the fail-yards, and worked hard to cut them afunder. This could not be done without a noise, which soon discovered their defign; upon which they were immediately plied with cannon and musket-ball, but as the firing was made from an higher ground, and directed downwards, it did no execution. The admiral de Monte, who commanded in the island, seeing this had no effect, refolved to attack them in their own way, and for that purpose sent some Maltese soldiers, who were excellent fwimmers, to them; these stripping themselves, and holding their fwords in their teeth, came up with the Turks, beat them off the staccado, killed and wounded a good number of them, and purfued the rest, who made off as fast as possible, and got with great difficulty to the other fide of the port. They returned how-ever the next day, and before they were perceived had tied some cables to the masts and fail-yards, which had been laid for the security of the pallisado, and endeavoured to move and carry off the piles by the force of the capstanes of their ships, which were placed on the shore. But all the Maltese were excellent swimmers, fo that they no fooner discovered this new kind of attack, but feveral Maltefe, threw themselves into the water, and with their fabres cut all the cables, and baffled this fecond attempt of the basha.

AFTER these little attacks, which were of no very great confequence on either fide, Mustapha, on the fifth of July began to fire from all his batteries together. That which was placed upon mount St. Margaret battered the quarter called la Bormole, and the bastion of Provence: but the officers of the artillery feeing it did little mischief, turned it against the fort of or castle St. Michael. The Turks had another upon the Coradin rock, which fired continually upon the bastion that lay over against them, and the cannon which they planted upon fort St. Elmo and mount Sceberras played upon the castle of St. Angelo. There were other batteries raised upon mount Salvator, that of Calcara, and on other eminences adjacent, which battered the great town, and the posts of Castile, Germany and England. That of Arragon was in a manner demolished already. All these batteries, and those of the Christians which anfwered them, made fuch a dreadful and continual fire. that the island seemed to be a volcano, and looked like another mount Etna. The Turks, under cover of their artillery, ran their trenches up to the ditch fide, but being

being stopped by a small redoubt that covered it, they battered that work with so much fury, that the knights sinding themselves unable to defend it any longer, blew it up, and recired within the island.

THE point of land on which the castle and town of St. Michael stood, had no manner of communication with the great town and the castle of St. Angelo, and could get no fuccours from thence, but by means of a ferryboat, which being heavy, and its motion very flow, exposed all such as crossed over to the fire of the infidels. The grand mafter, by the advice of John Anthony Bosio, a young knight, and brother to the annalist of the order, caused a bridge of his invention to be made of pipes and hogsheads well pitched, which he afterwards covered over with planks. They placed it out of the reach of the fire of the enemies muskets, and as they run very nimbly upon it, they were not hurt by the fire of the artillery. This bridge proved afterwards very serviceable for the passage of those succours which they were obliged to fend to fort St. Michael.

THE Turks knowing it to be the weakest part in the whole island, plied it hard with cannon-shot. Nor did their batteries make less execution upon the great town: considerable breaches were soon made in some places, but the basha did not think sit to attempt a storm till after he had entirely ruined all the out-works; besides, he was desirous of waiting for the arrival of Hassan, viceroy of Algiers, who had sent him word, that he would immediately advance with a good reinforcement, composed of the slower of all his forces.

THE grand master, surprised at his having no news of the viceroy of Sicily's armada, wrote in the strongest terms on that subject to the commander Salvago, who resided at his court, in order to hasten the succours. He was an able minister, and could not be repreached with either want of zeal and assisting, or of remissions in executing the several orders he received from the grand master. But he had to deal with a proud and haughty Spaniard, with whom he thought himself obliged to observe certain measures for fear lest he should ruin the affair by being too earnest in his sollicitations, and by that means afford him the pretext he wanted, in order to excuse himself from sending the fuccours he had promifed. The grand mafter's letter, the loss of fort St. Elmo, and the danger to which the isle de la Sangle was exposed, put him out of all patience; fo that he went without farther ceremony to the viceroy, and complained, in the grand master's name, of his flowness in dispatching the succours; telling him moreover, that the basha was laying close siege to the great town and the castle of St. Michael at the same time, and that his troops were already advanced up to the He added, in the utmost transports of zeal and grief, that Malta was on the point of being loft, but that all the nations of the Christian world would eternally reproach his memory, for having fuffered the flower of all the gentry in Christendom, to be cut to pieces by his affected delays; and finding that the viceroy answered him only in general and ambiguous terms, he flung out of the palace, and coming up to the people who were affembled in the great square, he cried out, that Garsia was playing a double game, and that he, by his continual shifts and evasions, was going to deliver up the grand mafter and his knights into the hands of the infidels.

Vol. V. B · proud

The complaints of the agent of Malta were indeed but too well founded; but after all, the viceroy was not in reality fo much the author as the minister of these delays, he having received private orders not to be too forward; and indeed under a prince who was as imperious and secret in all his actions as Philip II. and who sacrificed every thing to appearances, he would have been equally ruined, had he either been too hasty in sending away the succours, or had let the world see that it was not in his power to send them whenever he pleased. However, finding that Salvago's complaints made a great impression upon the minds of the people, he said, to save his own reputation, that he could could not rashly expose his master's fleet, that he would ask the advice of fuch of his ministers and principal officers as were in Italy; that he would afterwards call a great council of war, when all the necesfary measures for sending immediately a strong body of troops to the relief of Malta should be adjusted. But this was far from being his real intention, much less that of the king his mafter, whose slow and uncertain policy put him always upon waiting for the benefit of time, which he often loft. Philip and his minister con tenting themselves with a vain offentation of his forces, imagined that the bravery of the knights alone would be sufficient to baffle the enterprise of the Turks, and that at most they had no more to do, than to have the fuccours in a readiness to be sent off, in case they found that they were too closely attacked, and that there should be a real necessity for them.

Such were the private views of the council of Spain. John Andrew Doria, who was not let into the fecret, and was at this time with his gallies in the port of Messina, offered the viceroy to transport two thousand men to Malta, till such time as all the forces of the king of Spain could be got together. He shewed him the way he would take to carry them, and said, that before the Turks could have weighed up their anchors, or have cut their cables, he, by the strength of oars, should be got into the great port as far as the castle of St. Angelo, and that, provided he could but land his troops and his crew, which would serve for soldiers and pioneers, he did not value if he afterwards lost the hulks of his gallies.

The viceroy at first applauded the generosity of the proposal, and came so far into the project, that he made Doria swear to put it immediately in execution; but whether it were from a secret jealousy, for fear lest all the honour of the enterprise should accrue to him, or else that he was not willing to engage in it, till such time as he had received fresh orders from Madrid, he sent Doria with his gallies to Genoa and the coast of Tuscany, on pretence of setching from thence some necessaries for this particular expedition, and by this setch eluded the opportunity of dividing his forces. ever, as Salvago and a great number of knights, who were daily arriving from all parts of Christendom at Mesfina, in their passage to Malta, were continually folliciting for the succours, he ordered two gallies to be fitted out, the command of which he gave to Pompeio Colonna, with a good number of knights on board. But whether it were that the commodore had private orders to run no hazard, or that he had not the fame zeal to fuccour the grand master as Doria had, he advanced only at a certain distance from the great port, when finding the entrance of it shut up and guarded by the Turkish fleet, he tacked about and came into the ports of Sicily, and at his return, reported to the viceroy, that he must absolutely have all his forces united in one body, otherwife it would be impossible for them ever to open a passage, or force the insidels to raise the fiege.

B 2

HASSAN, viceroy of Algiers, arrived at the camp about this time with two thousand five hundred men, all of them old and refolute foldiers, and commonly called the bravo's of Algiers. When he faw fort St. Elmo, and confidered its smallness, he could not forbear crying out, that had his foldiers been at the fiege. it would not have held out fo long. This young Turk was fon to Barbarosa, and fon-in-law to Dragut: proud of those celebrated names, and in hopes of making his own as illustrious, he desired the basha to entrust him with the attack of fort St. Michael, boasting that he would carry it fword in hand. Mustapha, who was an old general, and who would not have been forry that this bold youth should learn, at his own expence, how dangerous it was to come within reach of the sword of the knights, answered him in a very obliging manner, That as he did not doubt of his success. he freely confented that the fultan should bestow upon him all the honour that so brave an action merited; and, in order to enable him to carry his point, and attack the isle both by sea and land, he gave him six thousand men, assuring him at the same time, that he would would fustain him on the land fide at the head of all his

HASSAN, with his Algerines, refolved to attack the peninfula both by fea and land; towards the continent, in that part where it joined to the main land, and towards the port on the other fide. He left this last attack to Candelissa his lieutenant; he was a Greek renegado, and an old corfair, of a cruel and bloody difpolition, but an excellent feaman, having fpent his whole life under Barbaroffa, and commanded at this time the Algerines, who followed Haffan to the fiege, he having divided them between himself and his lieutenant on this occasion. To prepare for this double attack, the Turks for several days together kept a continual fire with their artillery from leveral batteries. They had raifed one of three cannons upon mount St. Elmo, which played upon the Spur or point of the island. There was another of thirteen cannons and a double culverin planted upon the Corradin rock, which fired continually on the courtin of the castle of St. Michael. The front of the castle was battered by three cannons from a place called the Hermitage. They had railed on mount St. Margaret another battery of fix cannons, which played upon the fortifications of the castle of St. Michael, and made great havock among the houses within. One would have thought hitherto that the Turks were minded only to make war at a distance, and to carry it on with their artillery; but on the fifteenth of July, at day-break, the scene changed, and they came to a long and bloody engagement, in which the bravest of both parties lost their lives.

Whilst the Turks, through the ruins which their artillery had made, were endeavouring to force their way into the island, their slaves had drawn, by strength of arms, a prodigious number of boats from portMusset, cross mount Sceberras, and had launched them in the great port, and Candelissa had put part of the Algerine foldiers on board them, together with upwards of 2000 men, whom the basha had given him for this enterprise. This little sleet, if we consider the size of their vessels, being well armed, and numerous enough to cover the great port in a manner, let out from the coast of mount Sceberras, with drums beating, haut-boys, and other barbarous instruments playing, as they moved along. It was preceded by a bark full of mahometan priefts and dervifes, some of whom were imploring the assistance of heaven with hymns and prayers, whilst others were reading out of books which they held in their hands, imprecations against the Christians. This ceremony foon gave way to arms of a more formidable nature, when the Turks advanced boldly to the staccado. Candelissa imagined he should be able to make his way through some part of it and break it; or, in case of disappointment, his design was to make his foldiers climb over the staccado, and, by the help of a great number of planks, one end of which was to be laid upon the top of the piles, and the other upon the shore, he thought to make a kind of a bridge to land his men: But he was mistaken in his conjectures, the shore being farther off than he imagined, and the planks proving too short; and when he attempted to break the chain. or cut the fail-yards, which fastened the piles that formed the staccado, the Turks were in a moment overwhelmed by the fire from the muskets: and the artillery of the castle of St. Angelo, with all the batteries of the ifle which looked towards the port, firing upon them at the same time, sunk a good number of their boats, and forced the rest to make off.

Their general however rallied them together, and observing that the staccado did not so entirely cover the point of the isle, but that it left a place where he might attempt to make a descent, he accordingly made towards it. 'Twas a kind of cape or promontory, on which they had made a strong entrenchment, that was lined by a good number of arquebusieres, and washed to the bottom by the water of the port. This point of land was defended by a battery of six cannons, (playing level with the water of the port) which the grand master had planted just below two wind-mills that stood upon the eminence. The commander de Guimeran, an old knight, of whom mention has been often made, and ever with honour, commanded at this post: he suffered the boats of the enemy to advance near the shore, but as soon as he saw them within reach, he gave them such a fire, with his great and small shot, that several of their boats were sunk, and we are told that near 400 Turks were killed by this volley.

Αт

CANDELISSA, who had been brought up, as it were, in the midst of fire, and inured to all the dangers of war, made to the shore, whilst the Christian cannoneers were charging their artillery again, and landed at the head of his Algerines. But he here met with new perils; for Guimeran, when he fired his cannons, had referved two loaden with cartridge shot, which he now poured in upon the Turks. Great numbers of them dropped, but their intrepid general, feeing part of his foldiers give way, and feveral of them making back to their boats, did all that lay in his power, by making use of intreaties and menaces: but, above all, endeavouring, by his own example and refolution, to oblige them to stand their ground on the shore; and in order to cut off all hopes of retreating, commanded the boats to make off. This was telling his foldiers that they must either vanquish or die; and indeed it was manifested on this occasion, that despair often pushes us on to actions that are superior to courage, or the ordinary strength of nature. The Algerines, who were in the front of the attack, with a fabre in one hand, and a ladder in the other, endeavoured to get upon the entrenchment. They all strove who should first seize upon so dangerous a post, and unanimoully pressed forward with a generous contempt of death. There was a dreadful flaughter made in the engagement, which was a very long one: the blood ran down in streams to the foot of the intrenchment: but the Barbarians attacked it with so much fury and resolution, that they, at last, after an engagement of about five hours, gained the top of the intrenchment, and planted feven enfigns upon it.

Ar the fight of these standards, the knights, though reduced to a small number, being ashamed of their retreat, faced about upon the enemy with a noble indignation. Admiral Monti put himfelf at their head; and, after a fresh volley of small shot on both sides, they closed, and engaged one another with their half pikes, fwords and daggers : fortune however feemed in fufpence on the fide of the knights, of whom to great a number had been flain, and those who survived were fo wearied and spent, that they had just reason to fear the worst; when the grand master, whose vigilance extended to every scene of action. having notice of the extremity to which those who defended the Spur of St. Michael were reduced, sent the commander de Giou, general of the gallies, and the chevaliers de Quiney, and Kuiz de Medina, with a party to their assistance. This fuccour was preceded by another of a very fingular kind: a company of boys, near 200 in number, armed with flings, which they used with great dexterity, crying out fuccour and victory, poured in showers of stones upon the enemy. The commander de Giou. advancing immediately at the head of his men, with his pike in his hand, charged the infidels, tore down their standards, drove them before him, and forced them to quit the rampart where they were going to make a lodgment. The knights purfued them close with their drawn swords, and forced the greatest part of them to throw themselves headlong down: Candeliffa, their commander, was one of the first that fled; and though he had ever hitherto discovered the utmost intrepidity and courage, it yet was damped before the engagement was ended. He had no fooner lost all hopes of vanquishing, but his intrepidity fled away at the same moment; and the fear of falling into the hands of the knights, who gave no quarter, obliged him to call back his boats, and he himself was the first that leaped in. His own foldiers, ashamed of his precipitate flight, which dishonoured their body, called him afterwards by no other name than that of the Greek traitor. They gave out that he was a renegado in a double double fense; and that he, after having renounced the Christian religion, and embraced that of Mahomet, had not been willing to complete the advantage he had gained through the hopes of his meeting with a more favourable reception among the Christians upon his return to them, which had been the reason of his delivering them up to the fury of the knights.

THE

HOWEVER, the algerine bravo's, notwithstanding their being deserted by their leader, still fought on as they retreated with great courage; but serjeant major Sada, the chevaliers Adorne, a Genoese, Paul Ferrier, of the language of France, and a Florentine gentleman named Corbinelli, incensed at their obstinate resistance, sallied out at a casemate with a party of soldiers; surprised and charged the insidels so warmly, that after having killed great numbers of them, they forced the rest to sly for their lives to the boats and shallops which were returned to take them in.

THE sea was not much more favourable to them than the land, they being obliged to make their way through the fire of all the batteries that had annoyed them so much at their approach, and upon their landing, and which now funk feveral of them in their retreat. Even those who had thrown themselves on board, crowding in too great numbers, funk down to the bottom; fuch as could not get boats embraced the knees of the victorious foldiers, and begged for quarter; but they received no other answer, than that they should have St. Elme's pay; and accordingly were, by way of reprifal, all cut to pieces. There were others who, in order to avoid this kind of death, flung themselves into the sea, though they could not swim, and were either drowned, or killed with the fire from the muskets. The water of the port was in a little time covered with dead bodies, with heads, arms and mangled limbs. Scarce had there ever been feen a more hideous and dreadful spectacle; and of four thousand men whom the general had put on board for this enterprise, there hardly escaped five hundred, and most of thele were grievoully wounded.

THE order, not to reckon the private foldiers, loft near an hundred persons of distinction, who were either knights or fecular gentlemen, and whom a zeal for the Christian religion had brought to Malta. Among these they particularly regreted the loss of brother Frederic de Toledo, fon to the viceroy of Sicily, a young knight, whom the grand mafter, out of regard to his father, who was vallly fond of him, had always kept near his person; but the young gentleman, hearing the distress that the knights who defended the Spur of St. Michael were in, stole away from him, and ran to that part which was most in danger, where he was killed by a cannon-ball. His death proved fatal to the chevalier de Savoguerre, who, being close by him, was killed by a splinter of his cuirass. At the same time another ball killed the chevalier Simon de Soufa, a Portuguese, and shot off the arm of the chevalier Gaipard de Pontevez, of the language of Provence. The chevaliers Simiane de Gordes terjeant-major, Mello a Portuguese Roderic de Cardinez, and Brunesay de Quiney, who had brought the first succours into the island, though wounded, would not yet quit their post. The grand master could not prevail upon them to retire into the infirmary; but they, getting themselves dressed on the fpot, stayed on the place where they had received their wounds.

Nor was less blood shed on both sides at the viceroy of Algier's attack. This commander, after having ordered the signal for the assault to be given by a cannon-ball, advanced boldly at the head of his troops to the several breaches which the artillery had made on the side of the Bormole, and the castle of St. Michael.
The Algerine troops, which he had kept with him, were in the front of the attack, and came forward with so much heat and resolution, that they soon planted their ensigns along the parapets. Colonel Robles, a person of celebrated valour, and yet more so for his experience in war, commanded at that post: he, in order to stop the first impetuosity of the insidels, saluted them with the fire of all his artillery, which they had purposely charged with cartridges; and the shot slying through the thickest of their battalions, made at first an horrible massacre, and whilst they were putting fresh charges into the cannon, and the mortar pieces, a good number of Castilian and Portuguese knights, who were posted along the slank of the Eormole, discharged such a terrible sire from their small arms, that the Algerines, in spite of all their bravery and resolution, were not able to withstand the fury of it, so that their commander drew them off, and marching along the side of the parapet. Ied them to another breach, where, as some deserters had informed him, he should meet with less resistance.

THE chevaliers Carlo-Rufo, and Ia Ricca, both captains of gallies commanded at that post; who, in order to secure their soldiers from some batteries which the Turks had raifed upon the adjoining hills, had hollowed and funk the earth on the infide of the wall. But the courtin, by this digging away the ground, was made to high, that they were obliged, in order to defend the breach and stand an assault, to throw up immediately a kind of bridge or gallery; and by reason of the little time that was allowed for that purpose, the work was so ill performed, and withal so narrow, that several knights, and a great number of soldiers, were there destroyed by the fire-works which the Turks were continually throwing at them. The chevaliers Rufo and la Ricca exposing themselves in all places, were dangeroufly wounded, and quite disabled. They were succeeded by admiral Monti, who commanded in chief. This officer immediately tent for a reinforcement of a party of those knights who had fignalized themselves in the defence of the spur, and had just before repulsed the infidels with so much vigour A considerable number of these, and among the rest Quiney, and the serjeant-major Simione de Gordes, notwithstanding their being wounded, would needs share in these new dangers: they ran to the breach at the head of a company of brave inhabitants; and, as if the first advantage which they had gained had been a certain earnest carnest of victory, their presence soon changed the face of the combat. The few knights and soldiers who were left at this post, at the sight of this reinforcement, were inspired with fresh courage, and they all fought with so much interpidity and resolution, that the viceroy, unable to withstand them any longer, was forced to order a retreat to be sounded, having seen most of his Algerine bravo's drop by his fide.

THE basha, despairing to vanguish the knights any other way than by exhaulting and wearing them out, resolved not to give them a moment's rest; and therefore, after having engaged them for five hours together fuccessively, he renewed the assault, and, instead of the Algerines, fent on the Janizaries, whom the grand seignior had given him for this expedition. These soldiers, the main strength of the Ottoman empire, advanced up to it with a bravery that is proof to every kind of danger. 'Twas against this formidable body that the Christians, parched with heat and thirst, and quite spent with fatigue, were forced to take up arms. However, they, as if they had been insensible to the cravings both of hunger and thirst, and to the raging heat of the dog-days, and had been invulnerable, gave the enemy a fresh volley with their small arms, came up with them, and attacked them fword in hand. They now close together, each man seizing his opposite adversary, so that in the midst of a general engagement, there were frequently as many private duels as there were combatants. The Janizaries difcovered as much intrepidity as the knights, nor were less backward in braving dangers. The peril and fury of the troops were equal on both fides; when a Turk, perceiving the flaughter the chevalier de Quiney made of his comrades, and not valuing what became of himfelf, provided he could but kill him, advanced up to him, and firing his piece, that him through the head, but he himself fell the same moment by the sword of another knight. However, the death of this Janizary was but a poor fatisfaction for the loss the order suftained by that of so brave a knight. The chevalier de

Simiane

Simiane furvived him but a few moments; he had put himself at the head of a party of the inhabitants, composed of men, women, and children; and whilst the latter were throwing stones, fire-works, and boiling oil upon the enemy, he charged them with fo much fury, that the Turks, unable to stand it, quitted the breach, and took to their heels, in spight of all the cries and menaces of the basha. Simiane, in order to prevent their officers from bringing them on to a fresh engagement, immediately set pioneers to work, who, in his presence, and by his directions, laid wool-sacks and gabions upon the breach, and dug cuts behind the first barricado, which they fortified with good intrenchments. But as he, regardless of his own safety, was employing himfelf in so urgent a work, and which was so necessary for the security of the place, his head was struck off by a cannon-ball. Thus died a knight, who was one of the most distinguished of his language, on account of his birth, and still more so by his bravery and skill in the art of war. Upwards of forty more, and about two hundred foldiers, lost their lives in this last attack. As they fought with very little intermisfion, and that numbers of them were daily killed and wounded, they were obliged to fill up their places with new officers; fo that the commander Anthony du Fay, of the family of St. Romain, was made ferjeant-major, and the post of Carlo-rufo and la Ricca, who were both mortally wounded, was given to the chevaliers John Antonio Grugno, and Julio Malvicino, who had both some skill in fortifications, and in the art of attacking and defending of fortreffes.

The basha, whom neither the greatness of dangers, nor the difficulties he met with could dishearten, ordered a bridge to be framed after the model of that which he had made at the siege of St. Elmo, composed of the fail-yards and masts of ships. The grand master, who forelaw the consequences of it, and the advantage it would be of to the Turks in storming the place, attempted twice to set it on fire in the night: but his soldiers were repulsed both times, and the enterprise appeared so difficult, that they were convinced it would be impossible for them to succeed in it but in the day-time. The danger was evident from the great number of Janizaries, all of them excellent musketeers. who were posted on the counterscarp. The grand master, as a proof that his nearest relations were not dearer to him than the other knights, ordered Henry de la Valette, his brother's son, to make the attempt. The young knight, who was full of fire and spirit, in company with the chevalier de Polastron, his particular friend, fallied out at the head of a good number of foldiers, in broad day-light. As the bridge was not yet well fixed, he thought to break it down by tying strong ropes and cables to the posts and principal beams that supported it, and afterwards to draw them by main force out of their place, and so make the whole work fall to pieces. The foldiers at first set about it with resolution enough; but as they worked in a place which was exposed to the enemies fire, they were demolished in a moment by a storm of small shot, which killed abundance of them, and forced the rest to retire for shelter under the fortifications of the castle. Valette, and the chevalier de Polastron, were too brave to follow the example of their foldiers; and, not minding whether they followed them or not, endeavoured to supply what was defective on their part, and to faften the ropes themselves to the props of the bridge. But they met with the same fate as their foldiers; for they were scarce got down to the foot of the bridge, when they were shot by two musket balls, that killed them on the spot. As the basha had offered a reward for every knight's head that should be brought him. fome Janizaries advanced immediately to cut off those of la Valette and Polastron. But the Christian soldiers were in such concern at having deserted their officers, that they chose rather to lose their lives as they had done, than to return back into the town without at least bringing off their bodies along with them. This brought on an engagement between the two parties; and the dispute who should get possession of the dead bodies.

Vol. V, C terprise

bodies, was the occasion that many lost their lives on both sides. But the Christians, being either stronger, or more obstinate in the engagement, gained their point at last, and retired back into the place with this forrowful advantage.

THE grand mafter bore the death of his nephew with great constancy of mind, and added this virtue to the shining qualities which he discovered during the whole course of the siege; and when some old knights were going to condole with him on his lofs, " All the " knights, says he to them, are alike dear to me; I " consider them all as my children, and I am as sensi-" bly concerned at Polattron's death, as that of la Va-" lette: after all, they have only got the start of us " for some days: and in case the Sicilian succours do " not arrive, and that there is no possibility of saving " Malta, we must all die to a man, and be burried un-" der its ruins." Whereupon an old commander telling him, that he had been informed by a deferter, that the basha had swore, in case he should take Malta, to put all the knights to the fword, and referve only the grand master, in order to present him to the grand feignior: " I shall take care to prevent him, replied " la Valette; and if the siege, so contrary to my hopes, " should end in so fatal a manner, I declare, says he, " before you all, addressing himself to the knights who " were about him, that I am refolved, in that extre-" mity, rather than they shall ever see, whilst I am " alive, a grand master carried in chains to Constan-" tinople, to dress my self like a private soldier, and " rush into the midst of the enemies battalions, there " to be killed, and there die with my children and " brethren."

Such were the fentiments of this great man, so truly worthy of his dignity; and we may justly affirm, and indeed all the knights of that time agreed, that the main strength of the island lay in the virtue, the courage, the resolution, and foresight of la Valette, and that the safety of Malta depended entirely upon his preservation. However, he valued his own life less than he did that of others; and after having been in person to reconnoitre the bridge, where his nephew had been killed, he ordered an hole to be made in the wall over against it, and on the same level, where he planted a piece of artillery, which fired with such success, that it soon shattered the bridge, and the night following they set fire to it, and burnt it to assess.

THE basha, enraged at such a resistance, and fearing that the ill success of the siege might draw upon him the fultan's displeasure, called an extraordinary council of war. He there first gave them an account of all he had hitherto transacted for the taking of the feveral fortresses of the island, and then represented to them, that the only reason of his attacking fort St. Michael, was, because it seemed the weakest in the whole island, which, if he could once take, it would open him a way for the reducing of the great town and castle of St. Angelo; that however, he had not neglected to batter inceffantly this last place, with his artillery from mount Salvator, and other adjacent posts; and that the subject of their present meeting was to consider whether they should give over the attack of the isle de la Sangle, in order to unite all'their forces against the castle of St. Angelo; or whether it were not better, in order to divide and weaken the forces of the befieged, to carry on the attack in different places at the fame time.

THE council, after a mature confideration of the reasons on both sides, agreed to the last proposal; and it was accordingly resolved, that the basha, with the viceroy of Algiers, should continue the attack of the isle, whilst admiral Piali, with his marines, should lay siege to the great town and the castle of St. Augelo: and that, in order to prevent the viceroy of Sicily's throwing any succours into these places, Candilessa, Hassan's lieutenant, should guard the sea with fourscore gallies well armed.

THE basha, pursuant to this scheme, renewed his batteries against the isle de la Sangle; so that not only the walls and bastions of the fort were demolished, but the very houses of the town, and the inside of the castle were likeways very much damaged, and there was scarce a place in it but what bore some marks of the fury of the cannon. Admiral Piali, on his side, that he might not be out-done by Mustapha, in his eagerness for pushing forward his work, raised a new battery upon mount Salvator of twenty cannons, among which were three basilises, or great cannons, and two mortars, some of which threw stone-bullets of three hundred pound weight, and others iron balls of fixty, and some of fourscore pounds. All these different batteries played incessantly upon the post of Castile, the slank of the post of Auvergne, and all other parts of the fortifications, as far as the infirmary.

His engineers directed their principal attack against the post of Castile, so that the trenches and other works were very far advanced on that side. They laboured at them night and day with indefatigable industry, not so much as resting in the hottest part of the day; insomuch that in a little time they ran them up to the walls of the place, and intrenched themselves so well with the earth which they dug up, and the stones which were shot against the town, that the workmen were all under covert.

The fiege grew more and more bloody every day, and worte to be dreaded for its confequences; the infidels did not allow the belieged a moment's rest; one while they attacked a fingle place, and anon they affaulted several together at the same time. The Christians indeed repulsed them with vigour, and killed them abundance of men; but yet, confidering the disproportion of their forces, they might be said to lose more than the Turks, and their garrisons were daily weakened. The basha, after having harassed them for four days together with continual skirmishes, and offers of attempting a scalado in several places, made, August the second, a fresh assault on fort St. Michael. The insidels, in hopes of plunder, advanced up to the breach with great resolution. The besieged sustained the attack couragiously, and repulsed the enemy; their officers, during the fix hours that the attack lasted, brought them on five several times to the affault; but they were always received with the same intrepidity. As their troops, and particularly the Janizaries, exposed themselves boldly, the knights made an horrible slaughter of them, and the basha, searing lest all the rest should be cut to pieces, ordered a retreat to be sounded.

FIVE days afterwards, which was the seventh of the same month, Mustapha made another assault; and, in order to oblige the belieged to divide their forces, fent three thousand men to attack the bastion of Castile, whilst he himself marched at the head of eight thoufand to storm the fort of St. Michael. The only weapons that were chiefly fought with at the post of Cafile, were arrows and small arms: their design was to draw the principal forces of the order on that fide; for which purpose the Turkish musketeers and archers advanced but flowly to the storm. But their greatest efforts, and the real attack was against fort St. Michael. The Janizaries, who were in the front, advanced boldly with great shouts, according to their usual custom; they were answered by a terrible fire from the place, which killed them abundance of men before they could come near the walls: but they, without being daunted at feeing nothing but death all around them, marched with intrepidity over the bodies of their comrades, and forced their way to the top of the breach, where both parties, as if they had been in the field, fought with equal fury for four hours together; the Turks were for keeping the posts they had seized upon, and the Christians exerted themselves to the utmost, in order to prevent their making a lodgement there. mong the latter, all, even to the very women, fignalized themselves against the infidels : and whilst the peafant and the citizen were defending their country, their wives and children fought with an intrepidity which equalled, in some measure, the resolute bravery of the knights: and if paternal or conjugal love inspired those men with a courage and force, to which they had been hitherto insensible, there were not wanting heroic women, who ran to the assistance of their fathers, their brothers, and their husbands, and who generously exposed themselves to the greatest dangers.

Some of these brought stones, arrows, victuals and refreshments to the combatants, whilst others of a more dauntless spirit mixed in the fray, and threw fire-works, scalding water, and melted pitch upon the Turks: the fear they had of losing their honour and their liberty, in case they should fall into the hands of the infidels, inspired these brave women with a contempt of all the horrors of impending death. The Turks, still furious and eager for fighting, and enraged to fee their courape opposed by such feeble enemies, fell upon them without mercy, fo that several of them died by their weapons, and the fire-works which they threw at them. The breach and the castle seemed all on fire, and the tumult of the combatants, the clashing of their arms, the cries of the foldiers, the groans of the wounded, and of the persons of both sexes who were just expiring, and lay confounded together upon the ground, formed a spectacle that was as moving as it was dreadful.

THE basha, who had posted himself at the foot of the breach, ran with his fabre in hand, on all fides, exhorting, intreating and threatning his foldiers, and crying out, that if they would but exert themselves a little more, they would certainly carry the place. He, with his own hand, killed two janizaries who had thrown themselves down from the breach, in order to prevent their falling by the fword of the knights. The rest of his soldiers, terrified by this action, and seeing that the fwords of their officers were as fatal as those of their enemies, laid afide all thoughts of putting an end to the engagement any otherwise than by cutting all the belieged to pieces. Each fingle janizary fought with as much eagerness, as if the victory had depended on himself only. In fine, after the assault had lasted upwards of four hours, and at a time when the grand master was in some pain about the success of it; the basha,

basha, to the great astonishment of the Christians, as well as of the Turks, ordered a retreat to be sounded. They were afterwards informed, that the commander Mesqueta, governor of the Notable-city, had been the occasion of it.

MUSQUETA, who was an old officer, and a man whose vigilance extended it self to all places, seeing, from the highest part of the city, that the castle of St. Michael looked as if all in a blaze, made no question, but that the Turks were attempting a storm, and that the befreged were attacked with the utmost vigour; upon which he ordered a body of cavalry to march out of the place, each trooper carrying a foot-foldier behind him, in order to make a diversion. chevaliers de Lugny and Vertura commanded this detachment, who were ordered to go and discover how things flood at the fountain of la Marza, and moreover. to attempt to surprise and carry off the fick and wounded foldiers, whom the basha had lodged in that place, for the fake of water, and the coolness of the place; but he had not given them a strong enough guard. The chevalier de Lugny, leaving his infantry in ambush in a neighbouring village or hamlet, called Azabugi, in order to secure his retreat, advanced to the fountain, and, finding that the guards of the hospital were dispersed up and down the neighbouring hills, the better to view the two affaults, he ordered his troopers to alight, who, falling upon the fick and wounded, made a dreadful havock amon them. The surprise and confusion that generally attend on such unexpected attacks, the cries and groans of the dying, the flight of such of the wounded as could escape the fury of the Christians, all these circumstances united, spread a general terror over the Turkish camp; the fugitives gave out it was the van of the Sicilian army, and of the Christian succours, which being landed near that place, were marching forward to raise the siege. This report soon came to the basha's ears; and as in a general consternation, reafon often serves to no other purpose than to augment the terror and belief of the danger, Mustapha, though an excellent officer, was imposed upon by the current mistake. This had been the occasion of his commanding a retreat to be founded; when rallying his troops, he put himself at their head, and advanced towards the place where he expected to meet the enemy: but he found a general folitude in all places. For the chevalier de Lugny, after executing his general's orders, had judiciously withdrawn himself. The basha, arriving at the fountain of laMarza, and being informed that this bold enterprife had been atchieved by a party of the garrison of the city only, he fell into a violent pasfion; and that which particularly made his rage and shame still greater was, that he had suffered himself to be imposed upon so vastly, and had discontinued an asfault at a time when he had reason to hope he should succeed in it. Whereupon he was firmly resolved to return to the breach, renew the attack, and either die upon it, or carry the place. But his principal officers represented to him, that night was coming on; that his troops were excessively fatigued with the heat and obstinacy of the battle, and that it was absolutely necesfary to allow them time to refresh themselves. reasons prevailed upon him to return back to the camp. when they waited upon him to his tent, where he spent the night in forming new projects, in order to make himfelf master of the bulwark of Castile, and the fort of St. Michael.

The basha had not omitted one of those various kinds of attacks, which the fatal science of war had invented for the taking of fortresses; trenches, places of arms, redoubts, cavaliers, saps, mines, scaladoes, batteries upon batteries, planted in various places, and affaults renewed almost every day; in a word, every thing had been hitherto attempted, and generally basseled by the valour of the knights. Their presence upon the breach, and their intrepidity, had supplied the places of the strongest bassens. The Turkish general, in order to conceal his design, and prevent their taking measures to oppose it, had again recourse to mines: his pioneers and soldiers worked at them continually. The knights at the same time exerting themselves to the utmost, in order to discover and countermine them, when they often met with the insidels, and came to an engagement with them in those subterraneous passages. The great dispute in these combats was, who should keep possession of the chamber of the mine, and it frequently happened that both parties were destroyed, either by the mine's taking sire, or by the falling and weight of the earth that was blown up into the air, and which fell back again upon the combatants. But the grand masser and his officers could not discover all these mines; several escaped the observations and search of the ablest engineers: The Turks had run some by different channels under fort St. Michael, and the bulwark of Castile, both which places were entirely undermined.

THE grand master and his knights, being always in a manner between two sires, were not even safe on the ground they stood upon; and they had as much reason to dread the effects of the cannon as that of the mine, which springing up at once, and without any previous notice, was equally formidable.

In this dreadful state of things, la Valette wrote to the vicerov of Sicily, to represent to him the great need he had of speedy succours, acquainting him that the fortifications of the island were intirely ruined; that he had loft on different occasions the flower of his knights who had rushed fearless into danger; that such intrepid warriors were not long lived; that most of those who survived were shut up in the infirmary; that the enemy was strongly intrenched before the walls; and that he conjured him, in confideration of the great distress he was in, without either fortifications, troops, or fuccours, to dispatch away, at least, the two gallies of the order, which lay in the port of Messina, with the knights who were come thither from the remotest countries; it not being just, as he observed at the conclusion of his letter, to be tender of a part, and of a particular limb, when the whole body is exposed to an almost inevitable destruction.

GARSIA, though ever wavering and irrefolute, yet feeing it highly concerned both his mafter's honour as well as his own, to come to a final resolution, proposed the affair in council. John Andrew Doria, whose courage justly merited him the illustrious name of his great uncle, made him a proposal of sitting out all the naval forces of his catholic majesty, and of fighting the infidels at fea. But the viceroy immediately declared, that he had no authority to venture a battle; nor were the reasons strong enough to engage him to hazard the royal navy: that in case the Turks should happen to be victorious, the coasts of all his catholic majesty's dominions would by that means remain unguarded, and lie exposed to the invasions of the Turks; so that all that they had to confider was, whether it was the the king's interest to send a part of his roops to Malta: and that, supposing they should come to that resolution, whether it would be practicable to carry over the fuccours, and land them without danger, and without the knowledge or even in spite of all the opposition the infidels might make. There was no great difficulty as to the last article. The sea officers, whose opinion was first asked, unanimously agreed and demonstrated, that a body of troops might be easily landed in the island. But the land officers were divided in opinion, with regard to the fecond question, Alvarez de Sande, a famous captain, of whom mention has been already made, with respect to the siege which he sustained in the isle of Garbes, was intirely against the enterprite, and maintained stiffly, that the king of Spain was neither bound in justice, nor engaged by his own interest, to hazard his troops; that it was la Valette's business to confider his own circumstances, and the condition of his forces, before he carried matters to too great an extremity, and that he, in imitation of the grand master Villiers de Lisle Adam, one of his latest predecessors, might enter into a treaty with the enemy, and quit the island upon tolerable conditions.

Such as were acquainted with Sande's valour, and heard him deliver his opinion with fo much weakness, could not possibly dive into the motives of it. Some ascribed it to the fear he was under of falling again into the hands of the Turks, who had treated him cruelly during his captivity; others suspected, that he did it only in order to make his court to the viceroy, and perhaps to Philip himself, who, as we have already observed, minded nothing but shew, and who, after having got together a numerous sheet, levied troops in all his territories, and filled all Europe with the noise and expectation of the succour he pretended to send, would not perhaps have been displeased that a council of war, composed of the ablest generals of the age, should have thought it improper for him to hazard a part of his army.

BUT Ascanio della Corna, who had gained a great reputation in the wars of Piedmont and Italy, maintained warmly, on the contrary, that they could not decline fending fuccours to the knights of Malta, without exposing themselves to an eternity of reproaches. He represented that they, ever since their establishment at Malta, had always exerted themselves with the utmost bravery in the defence of the kingdoms of Naples and Sicily; that whenever the infidels were to be engaged at sea, or that a war was to be carried on in Africa, they had always joined the fleets and armies of his catholic majesty, and had been ever forward to expose themselves to the greatest dangers for his service; that the business then in question was the preservation of an illustrious order, an order which, without any ambitious views, and without ever attempting to make one fingle conquest for its own private advantage, was continually in arms, and daily facrificing its lives for the defence of the territories and subjects of all Christian princes with the utmost impartiality. He then descended to particulars, and remonstrated, that as the sea officers had agreed that they might convey and afterwards land the fuccours in the island without any danger, so those who were to command on shore might, by posting themselves advantageously, and by the favour of the rocks, the hills, and passes, with which the island aboundabounded, easily advance within fight of the places besieged; in which case the Turks, as they had not at that time above 15 or 16,000 men lest, and all of them extremely harrassed, would be obliged either to raise the siege, or be themselves invested; that the insidels would be obliged to oppose the attacks of the Christian army, and the sallies of the knights, and that at one and the same time, and in the midst of such engagements, it would be an easy matter for them to throw succours into the forts, and to change, or at least reinforce the garrifons.

This advice, being more generous, was carried by a plurality of voices; the viceroy himself came into it, and, in order to apologize for his affected delays, he wrote immediately to the grand mafter, by which he informed him, that he had just received orders from Madrid which left him at liberty to follow the dictates of his zeal and inclination for the order; that he would be at Malta towards the latter end of the month with 12000 land forces; that Doria and Vitelli were to bring 4000 more from Italy, and that he would immediately fend away the two gallies of the order, under the command of the chevaliers de Cornuston, and St. Aubin, with upwards of 200 knights, besides a great many gentlemen of different nations, who were come to Methina in order to fignalize themselves in the defence of Malta; that indeed, the king of Spain his master, had ordered him, as soon as he should have landed the troops, to return back with the ships and gallies to Sicily; that notwithstanding the earnest desire he had to diftinguish himself at the head of his army, he was indispensably obliged to obey; but that he, pursuant to his prince's intentions, would, before his fetting out, leave express orders with his general officers, to submit to him as to their commander in chief.

How agreeable foever these positive assurances might be, the grand master, who depended only on his own forces, wa still as careful and vigilant as ever: he was continually visiting the advanced posts, was ever exhorting and encouraging the soldiers, and as he exposed himself in places of the greatest danger, he was frequently the first man who engaged the enemy.

THE knights, under the conduct of so heroic a general, were all of them continually fighting, or bufied in some labour; and if the historians of that time did not affure us of the fact, we could hardly think it probable, that fuch an handful of warriors could have been able to hold out so long as they did, against such a number of attacks as they fultained, or bear up during fuch a series of watching, wounds, and fatigues. Nor did the Turks discover less bravery; and, above all, their generals could not so much as reflect upon the obstinacy of their defence, without shame and vexation. stabha and Piali, from a mutual emulation, attempted every thing that open force could do, and employed all the stratagems that the science of war could suggest: and exposed their own persons to the greatest dangers, as freely as they did those of their foldiers, in the hones they had, that he who should first make himself mafter of the post he attacked, would be honoured by the Sultan with the merits of the whole enterprise.

This emulation infpired the two generals with a refolution of either dying in the breach, or carrying the forts which they attacked. In purfuance of which, they agreed to attempt a new florm; to continue it, if necessary, for several days, and even nights together, and by that means weary out the knights, and vanquish them at least by exhausting their strength, in case they could not triumph over their valour.

PURSUANT to this resolution, they, on the 18th of the month, at noon, in the greatest heat of the day, advanced at the head of their several bodies, imagining they should find the knights asseep, and retired under the shade and shelter of their intrenchments. The basha commanded his soldiers to storm the breach of St. Michael, and the Turkish admiral that of the bastion of Castile. Both the attacks were made with great resolution, but with various success at sirst.

Some hours before the attack began at fort St. Michael, the infidels had made fuch a terrible fire upon it, that they did not leave so much as the least piece of a wall, fortification, or even intrenchment, standing. The basha then ordered his men to attempt a storm; and, as they were the very flower of his troops, were brave, and fought under the eye of their general, they performed wonders. The knights received them with an intrepid courage; and, though worn out with satigue, and the greatest part wounded, they never had before discovered so utter a contempt of danger. No sooner did one drop, but another stepped up in his place; and, after an obstinate engagement, which lasted for upwards of six hours together, they repulsed the enemy, more indeed by the greatness of their courage, than by the vigour of their strength.

that

THE Turkish admiral's attack on the bastion of Castile was equally dangerous and bloody. He had deferred attempting the florm for some time, in hopes that the grand master, when he should see that he made no motion, would detach fome of the troops that were to oppose him, in order to succour the fort of St. Michael, by which means he might make an advantage of their absence; but not finding that any body stirred, he forung a mine in a place where it was least suspected, which threw down a pannel of the wall. As foon as it had done execution, the besiegers, who were ready for the fform, fet up a great flout, mounted the breach in a trice; and the place had been certainly loft, if the knights upon guard there, who were not prepared for their reception, had been susceptible of fear. A chaplain of the order, brother William by name, feeing the Turkish standards set up at the foot of the parapet, ran in a terrible fright to the grand master, and made him figns at a diffance to retire immediately into the castle of St. Angelo. But the intrepid old man, clapping on a light head-piece, without fraying to put on his cuirafs, advanced refolutely with his half-pike in his hand to meet the infidels, when he, and the knights who were with him, gave them such a furious onset, that they could not stand it, and seeing the inhabitants running in crowds to the grand master's assistance, they D 2 began began to retire, but still making a terrible fire from their finall arms all the time. Mendoffa, who commanded at that post, seeing the grand master standing by him, and fearing least some ball should take him off, begged him on his knees to retire, representing to him that the fafety of the ifland, the lives, the liberty and honour of the women and maidens, depended on his preservation, and that if they should lose him all would be lost. But the grand mafter pointing to the Turkish standards, which were still hoisted and waving in the wind, told him, that he must first see those trophies of the infidels demolished; upon which all the knights who were about him rushed forwards immediately, when a new combat enfued, in which the bravest men fell on both fides: at last the standards were tore down, and the infidels forced to retire in diforder, covered with blood and wounds. The grand master made no question but that their leaders would foon bring them on to the fame attack, and therefore ordered quarters to be got ready for him there: the knights did not fail to represent to him, that he had made choice of a place which lay exposed to the enemy's artillery; but as he was fensible of the importance of that post, and how necessary his presence was to defend it, nothing could prevail upon him to remove from it. So after thanking the knights for the testimonies they gave him of their affection, "Will it be possible for me, says he to "them, at the age of seventy one, to end my life " more gloriously, than in fighting with my brethren " and my friends for the service of God, and the de-" fence of our holy religion?"

THE Turks, as the grand master had foreseen, returned that very night to storm both places: the attack was chiefly carried on with small shot, and the besieged on their side plied their enemies on all sides with granadoes, slaming hoops, and sire-works so that they fought almost by no other light, than that which was made by the sire of the artillery and sinall arms. The Turkish soldiers at the foot of the breach, not knowing how to direct their own shot, or secure them-

felves

felves from that of the Christians, gave over the attack several times; but their officers striking and cutting them with their canes and scimiters, forced them back as often. The soldiers who were as much incensed at this treatment, as disheartened by the resistance of the knights, and being unable either to advance upon the works or retire, resolved to impose upon their generals; when, as if they had been still attacking the knights, they only struck their swords upon their bucklers, and set up their shouts as usual in battle. But the basha perceiving at last, notwithstanding the darkness, that all the cries and notice they made was a meer sham, thought proper to defer the attack till day should appear, and immediately ordered a retreat to be sounded.

I CANNOT tell whether I may not have just reason to fear, that the reader will be tired with the repetitions of io many affaults, so little different from one another; but as both parties distinguished themselves in those scenes by performing the most brave, and the most heroic actions, and as the knights particularly, though reduced to a small number, softained for some months, both day and night, the continual attacks of a number-less multitude of enemies, who relieved one another by turns, but never allowed them a moment's rest, I imagined that this detail might be of use, as it gives a more just idea of the intrepidity of the combatants; and that I was moreover obliged to it, in order that my narration might not be wanting in exactness.

Be that as it will, the basha the day following, being August 19, gave the fignal for an affault at both attacks, by a general dicharge of his batteries. The Turks came on with fresh retolution to that of St. Michael, hoping to make themselves masters at least of the ravelin. What gave room to these hopes was a machine, being a kind of carcasse, but much larger, made in the shape of a long barrel, covered over with iron hoops, and siled with gun-powder, chains, nails, bullets, and all kind of iron instruments. The engineer, after having sastened a match of a proper length to it, found means to throw it upon the ravelin, where it fell among the knights who defended it. But they, no way daunted at this snoking machine, catched it up before it took fire, and threw it back upon the enemy, who were crowding to mount the breach: it burst a moment after, and, tearing every thing to pieces that came in its way, sent heads, legs, and arms, up into the air. The Turks, in a fright, immediately dispersed themselves; some fied as far as their trenches, when the Christian soldiers, animated with this dismal spectacle, and in order to make their advantage of the terror their enemies were in, fell in among them sword in hand, made a terrible havock, and forced the rest to retire.

D 2 where

PIALI's attack at the bastion of Castile was more dangerous, and lasted a considerable while longer. The infidels came on with an air of resolution, and in fpite of the continual fire of the Christians, which killed them abundance of men, they forced their way to the top of the parapet, and fixed their standards upon it. At the shouts the Turks gave, who fancied they were masters of the place, la Valette, who was not far off, ran thither with pike in hand, and charged the enemy with the utmost fury. The infidels resisted them with the same intrepidity, when they fought together with their pieces at their advertaries breaft. The commander of Bonneseigne lost his eye by a musketball, as he was fighting by the grand mafter's fide; others fell by the fword and fire-works. The grand mafter, advancing too far in the danger not to have his share of it, was wounded dangerously in the leg by the splinter of a grenado. He generously difregarded it as long as the combat lasted, continuing still, by his freeches as well as example, to animate his men, and thereby prevailed upon the common foldiers to fight, and behave themselves like so many officers, and as men who were inspired with a true sense of glory. A zeal for religion had the like effect upon the minds of the pealants and townsmen, by making them slight all the horrors of furrounding death, and put all the combatants as it were upon a level. A confiderable number of knights, braving the impending danger, met here with an honourable period to their lives. Cencio Cafconi, an old knight, who commanded at the Spur of St. Michael, informed of the danger to which the grand master was exposed, ran to his succour with a body of foldiers and inhabitants, and was the first who mounted on the parapet, together with the chevaliers Bergia, Mendossa, Don John, and de la Roche Pereyra. Pikes and fwords were then the only weapons used; the Turks and Christians often grappled together, and fought with a rage and fury as if every private man had been revenging an old quarrel, and gratifying a personal hatred. Both parties were continually sending new reinforcements to the combatants, which made the battle last till night. In fine, the knights who fought in the grand mafter's presence, made such powerful efforts, that they recovered the parapet, and drove out the infidels.

MUSTAPHA, who neither allowed his enemies nor his own troops any interval of rest, attempted another storm the day following, which was the twentieth; not that, after so many repeated trials he expected to carry places, so well desended, at once; but as he knew the grand master's strength lay principally in his knights, who were reduced to a small number, his design in carrying on these continual attacks was to take some of them off every day, and by that means at last reduce these two places, as he had already done fort St. Elmo, for their want of men sufficient to defend them.

However, as he saw his soldiers began to be dispinited by these perpetual attacks, in which he lost abundance of men, he set himself to contrive a way to secure them from the small shot of the knights, which made a dreadful havock among them. For this purpose he invented a kind of head-piece, made of thin wood, but proof against musket-shot, which reached down to their shoulders. He caused eight thousand of his foot, to put on this new kind of armour, and advanced at their head to attack fort St. Michael: but when they were to engage, his foldiers were fo encumbered, fo uneary, and to much weighed down with these wooden helmets, that they could neither attack the Christians nor defend themselves; so that they were forced to take off to troublelome a load, and then, naked as it were. advanced boldly to attack the fort. They were led on by Cheder, sangiac or governor of Bossine, an old officer of good reputation in the army, who had promifed the basha either to carry the work, or die in the attempt. This old foldier, who was used on fightingdays to wear fine cloaths, the better to diffinguish himfelf, was then dreffed in a rich veft, and advancing boldly up to the parapet, commanded the officer who carried his enfign, to hold it aloft; but the officer was foon killed, and the enfign thrown down. Upon this the langiac immediately ordered it to be taken up again; and though the post he was in was very much exposed, and feveral Turks were killed fuccessively one after another in the attempt, he still had it raised and hoisted aloft in the fight of the combarants during all the time the storm lasted. In fine, the last who carried it, having met with the same fate as his comrades, he himself took it; and holding it in one hand, and his fcimiter in the other, he fought, and obliged his foldiers to fight with wonderful resolution. But his fine cloaths drawing all eyes upon him, and his valour, and the deadly blows which he dealt about, distinguishing him still more, the chevalier P. floa, the grand master's page, killed him with a musket-ball, when a Turkish officer immediately took his place, and encouraged the foldiers to revenge the death of their general.

THEY indeed maintained at first their post with resolution enough; and so many single combats were, as it were sought, between several officers of both parties about who should get possession of the sangiac's body. The Turks at last carried it off; but they were so warmly pursued, that they were forced to take to their heels. In this rout, a knight threw himself on Cheder's ensign; but he who carried it, though mortally wounded, held it so fast, that he was sorced to break the staff of it in his hards, and could only carry off the colours, which were torn to rags. Several knights of diffinction were killed in this engagement. The commander John de la Cerda, afhamed of the weakness he had discovered at the defence of fort St. Elmo, had, in order to repair his honour, been for some time past seeking death, as it were, in every post of danger. He at length met with it on this occasion, and died bravely on the breach.

THE Turkish foldiers, beginning to despond after so many bloody storms attempted in vain, the basha found it necessary to allow them an interval of two or three days rest. But on the 20th, a letter was thrown into the great town, which they took up and carried, fealed as it was, to the grand mafter, who found nothing in it but this one word, Thursday. He was not at a loss to understand the meaning of it, and that it was to expect a fresh affault upon that day. cordingly prepared for it, with his ufal courage and resolution; and in order to prevent any surprise, and to found the disposition of his men, he caused a false alarm to be given on Tuesday the one and twentieth. Every body ran readily to his post; and by this trial the grand mafter had abundant reason to be pleased with the vigilance of the officers, as well as with the alacrity of the foldiers. He only observed, that by the daily loss they had sustained of a good number of knights, some of them were wanted in certain posts, in order to head and animate the foldiers.

This report reached the infirmary; all the wounded knights, who were able to frand upon their legs, bravely fallied out, and, like those of fort St. Elmo, chose rather to face death, and meet it on the breach, than wait for its coming in their beds. The grand master, admiring their generous spirit, distributed them into the several places where they were most wanted: and, finding himself sustained by warriors who seemed to have something in them more than human, he waited with impatience for the return of the enemy.

Вит

History of the Knights of MALTA.

But he had not long to wait; for, pursuant to the notice which had been given him, they presented themfelves on the twenty-third at both attacks: the basha led on his troops in person to storm fort St. Michael. This place, during the fickness of admiral Monti, was defended by the marshal Copier, the commander Giou general of the gallies, and by a confiderable number of the principal commanders of the order. The Turks. animated by Mustapha's presence and example, fought with great courage; none of them boggled at danger, nor did they meet with a lets vigorous relistance from the belieged. If the Turks, by making a bold ftruggle, ever got an inch of ground, they were foon repulted from it by the Christians. Each party had its alternative of good and ill success, without any one's being able to judge on what fide the victory inclined: the basha discovered, on this occasion, all that the bravery and conduct of a great general could perform, in order to furmount the disadvantages of his fituation; but the knights, having an advantage in their post, made such a terrible fire with their small arms, from the top of the breach, and were so well seconded by all their artillery, that the Turks, after having loft abundance of their men, lost likeways their courage. Such as were farthest off the breach began to steal away from the dan. ger; fuch as were nearer and more exposed took to their heels; nay, even their very officers gave back, and, in fpight of all the basha could either say or do, he could never bring them on to the storm again, so that he was forced to command arctreat to be founded, in order to fave the honour of his troops.

But the attack of the bulwark of Castile lasted longer, and was carried on with more vigour, and attended with greater danger: it was ushered in with a surious fire from the Turkish batteries, which played upon the breach in order to drive the Christians from thence, at the same time that a body of Janizaries, assisted by a crowd of pioneers, were raising a kind of platform close by the wall, and higher than the parapet: they here posted a party of musketeers, who made such a continual fire upon the befieged, that no body could appear either on the breach, or along the parapet, but was immediately killed. The grand mafter, who was ever in the hottest part of the fire, and of the danger, ran to the place; his presence inspired the besieged with fresh courage; nor was that of the besiegers any way damped; and though the whole time was spent in siring at one another, the combat was nevertheless bloody. It lasted till night, and in spight of all the fire the grand master could possibly make from all his batteries, he yet was not able to silence that of the enemy, who slattered themselves, as their cavalier commanded the breach, that they should make themselves masters of it the next day.

THINGS being in this deplorable condition, the council of the order met to confider what measures were proper to be taken: the town was undermined on all tides, the fortifications ruined, the enemy in possession of the out-works, and the breach in a manner blocked up by the cavalier, which was to close to the wall that the infidels could leap from it into the place. Most of the great crosses advised the grand master to abandon it; to blow up what fortifications were left, and to retire in time with their ammunition and provisions into the castle of St. Angelo, which had as yet received no damage. They repretented to him the danger they were in of the fortrets's being carried the next time a ftorm should be attempted, in case they should obstinately resolve to make a longer, and at the fame time, utelets refiftance; that in the hurry and confusion of a forced retreat, they would not probably have time to get to that fortress, the Lift that was left them; that the old men, and the women, would be in danger of falling a prey to the fury and brusality of the barbarians; whereas, on the contrary, if a fliong guard was but put upon the breach, they would have leifure enough, whilft the foldiers and inhabitants should be retiring, to carry their ammunition and provisions into the castle, and to take such precautions as should be necessary for its security and defence.

THE

THE grand master rejected this advice with as much horror and indignation, as if they had proposed the delivering up of the whole island to the infidels; upon which he shewed the council, that the great town, and the ifle de la Sangle, which still held out. lay so near together, and that there was such a reciprocal and necessary communication between them, that there was no defending or abandoning the one without the other, fo that the giving up the bulwark of Castile to the enemy would be to give up fort St. Michael at the same time; besides, that the castle of St. Angelo could never hold the foldiers, the inhabitants, and the great number of people who were to be taken out of those two places; that the cistern of the castle could not supply water enough for their drink, and that the bare want of a thing so absolutely necesfary for the support of life would reduce them in a few days to the fatal necessity of either dying of thirst, or furrendering the place to the Turks. The lords of the council replied, that if there was a necessity of their holding out the town and the castle of St. Michael to the last extremity, they yet begged him to withdraw into the castle of St. Angelo, and carry thither the relies and ornaments of the churches, with the most important writings and papers of the treasury; and that they should be in no pain for themselves, provided his person were but in safety, after which they should face all the perils of a new storm with pleasure. The grand master, who was not to be shaken in what he once had refolved upon, and who forelaw that the carrying of the effects of the order into the castle of St. Angelo would give the foldiers room to imagine, that they were not thought fafe enough in the town, rejected this second advice also and, addressing himself to the whole affembly, "'Tis here, my dear brethren, faid he to them, that we must either die together, or "drive out our mercile's enemies." And to flew the commanders who were about him, how far he was from retiring into the castle of St. Angelo, or making any provision for his own fafety, he only left just a few

few foldiers in it sufficient to manage the artillery, and drew out all the rest, employing them with the garrifon during the whole night long, in making cuts and intrenchments within the place. He himself superintended over these several works, with so much art and capacity, that though the Turks should the next day have carried the first intrenchment, they would still have found another behind it, and that too raised so high as to command them entirely; so that by disputing every inch of ground with them in this manner, he saw himself in a condition to hold outtill such time as the viceroy of Sicily might have an opportunity of coming to his assistance.

However, as the platform which the Turks had raifed against the wall gave him a secret uneafiness, he communicated his thoughts to the commander de Claramont, of the language of Arragon, whose capacity he well knew, and, by his advice, caused a hole to be opened in the wall the night following, with as little noise as possible. The commander, attended by Francis Guevaradu Pereira, and fon rother Spanish knights. fallied out at the gap, stole softly along the foot of the wall, till they got upon the platform, and then fetting up a great shout, they attacked the guards that Piali had left there, who fancying the whole garriion was falling upon them, fled away with precipitation. Claramout, instead of destroying this work, thought it advileable to fortify it: the grand master immediately fent him a party of foldiers and pioneers, who foon railed a parapet upon it to cover their musketeers. They likeways planted some pieces of cannon upon it, and the Turks were greatly surprised and confounded to fee the knights employ a work against them, which they had raifed in order to haften the destruction of the Christians.

THE ill success they had met with at the attack of the post of Castile did not damp the arder and eagerness of the basha; perhaps it might have given him an ill-natured pleasure, or, at least, as he flattered himself with the hopes of taking fort St. Michael, he was not forry Vol. V.

to find that the admiral had not first opened the way to victory, in order to ingross all the honour of it to himself. In the beginning of September, he ordered a new storm to be attempted; the Janizaries, to whom he had promised the plunder of the place, ran like so many furies to the foot of the breach, nor could the fhot of the artillery, the stones, the scalding water, or the fire-works which the belieged poured down upon them, prevent their getting to the top of it. They were already in possession of almost all the bastions of the fort; there was nothing left between them and the belieged but a wooden partition, and they were so close together, that their muskets croffed one another. The fight lasted for a long time with equal fury; but at last the infoperable bravery of the knights triumphed over the obstinacy of the Turks. They made them give ground before them, and threw them headlong down from the breach, in spite of all the basha could do. who now began to delpair of reducing the place any other way than by famine, which he still hoped might oblige a body of men to submit to a capitulation, whom he could not vanquish by open force or strata-

Bur it was not long before he was informed, that he had more reason to dread a want of provisions than the knights: the commissaries of his stores acquainted him, that a ship, which had been fent to the ifle of Gerbes for corn, was taken by the Sicilian gallies; that they had not meal to serve them for above twenty five days; and the officers of his artillery told him that their powder was almost spent. Under such unlucky disappointments, and particularly through the fear he was under, least the fultan should make his head pay for the ill fuccess of the expedition, he resolved to make a last struggle on the Notable city: and though the taking of this place, which was fituated in the middle of the country, was of no great consequence for the conquest of the island, he yet fancied, if he could but take it, and carry away all its inhabitants with him into flavery, as the furest testimonies of his victory, the noise of such an advantage, though not a very material one, would pacify the grand fignior; who might likeways be well enough pleased, for the sake of his own reputation, and for the glory of his arms, to have the people dazzled with fuch an appearance.

WITH this view, on the last day of August, he set out from his camp with four thouland men of his best troops, composed of Janizaries and Spahi. The place had been represented to him as poorly fortified, so that he was in hopes of taking it by icalado. But the strength of places does not confist to much in the bulwarks and bastions with which they are surrounded, as in the valour of the troops, and the capacity of the governor who defends them. Mesquita, the brave Portuguese knight, of whom mention his been already made, though he had but a weak garrifon, put on an air of boldness and resolution upon the first approaches of the enemy. He ordered the courting to be lined with cannons, muskets, pikes, standards, and colours; and, in order to make the Turks believe that his garrifon was very numerous, he made the people of the city, and the inhabitants of the country, who had retired thither for refuge, to mount upon the walls with his foldiers: even the women themselves, dressed in mens cloaths, mixed among the rest, and appeared in arms upon the bulwarks and buftions.

The artillery now began to thunder on all fides, and make a continual fire. The engineers, whem the basha had sent to reconnoitre the town, and the places where they might fix their ladders, were terrised at the fight of these warlike preparations. Their fright made them perhaps fancy them to be greater and more formidable than they were in reality: accordingly they reported to the general, that there was no attempting to carry a fort by scalado, that was defended by such a numerous garrison, without exposing the best troops he had left to be knocked on the head before his eyes; and that such places were not to be taken but by a regular siege, and by attacking them in form. The basha, who had neither forces nor time enough for such an enterprise, and being, moreover, afraid of being surprifed by the fuccours which were daily expected from Sicily, returned to his camp in the utmost uneasiness, without knowing what measures to take, or on what fide to turn his arms. His projects and stratagems were now quite exhausted: in this uncertainty he assembled all the engineers of his army, and pressed them to invent some machine that might be of service in a new affault, and bring this tedious and difficult enterprize to an end. The engineers replied, that they had already exhausted all the fecrets of their art, and that the rest depended on the courage and bravery of his troops. However they, in order to fatisfy him, framed a wooden tower, which was pushed along upon rollers up to the breach of fort St. Michael. This tower, like the old machines made use of in sieges before the invention of cantions, had feveral floreys. The highest, which over-looked the place, was filled with musketeers. who poured in their shot upon all that durst shew their heads; and to secure this last storey from being annoyed by the batteries of the castle, the infidels had no fooner fired a volley; but they, by means of certain wheels within the machine, and probably by the weight of the counterpoise, and the help of pullies, let down the top of the tower, which was then sheltered by the wall of the place, and rested against it. The Turks, by the help of this machine, killed abundance of men at first; but a Maltese carpenter, Andrew Cassar by name, a man who was very skilful in his bufiness, after having examined the structure of the tower, caused a loop-hole to be made in the wall, directly opposite to this wooden castle, where he placed a culverin loaded with chain-shot; and the moment the Turks were hoisting up their machine, he fired his cannon upon it, which took it in the middle, and shattered it to pieces; so that the soldiers, who were in the highest storey, either broke their necks with the fall, or were bruited to death under its ruins.

THE basha, vexed to the soul to see all his enterprises miscarry, and uneasy at that which was forming against against him at Messina, resolved to fall to mining again. Accordingly he let his pioneers to work again, and had recourse to this last resource; not so much in hopes of fuccess, as to keep his troops from imagining that he himfelf defponded, from his fuffering them to cominue in inactivity. But the knights, by opening pits and countermines in all suspected places, defeated the meafures of the infidels. They likeways, on their fide, ran other mines under the posts which the Turks had feized, and blew up a great number of them. The Christians now stood no longer on the defensive, but made feveral fallies, in which all the advantage was on their fide; fo that they began to fancy they could force the Turks to raise the siege, without the assistance of the viceroy The affected delays of that Spanish nobleman, had, for some time, made the grand matter despair of receiving any succours from him; and though his fleet was in a readiness, and both the officers and foldiers, intended for the service, expressed an extraordinary eagerness to figualize themselves against the infidels, nevertheless, the viceroy could not prevail with himself to set sail; and his irresolution made it be very much doubted whether he would really embark, or wait for the news of some disafter which he might make use of as a handle to excuse himself from setting out at all.

The noise however of these preparations had brought above two hundred knights, commanders and great crosses of different languages, to Modina, whose only view of coming thither was in hopes of meeting with ships to transport them to Malta. The viceroy's dilatorines put them out of all patience; the greatest part of them never left his palace, so that they besieged him as it were. There were even some of them, who, being bolder than the rest, and finding intreaties could not avail, had recourse to reproaches. The viceroy, who was naturally proud and haughty, complained about it, and was moreover offended, that the knights, when they spoke to him, did not give him the stile of Excellency. Lewis de Lastie, grand prior of Auvergne, faid to him bluntly on this occasion, " Provided, Sir, " we do but arrive time enough at Malta to foccour " the order, I will give you, with all my foul, the " title of excellency, of highness, or if you, please, of " majesty." The viceroy only smiled at what he said; and hearing that that old knight was descended of a noble family, and had acquired great honour in France in the wars against the Protestants, he drew him aside, and told him in private, that he, in confideration of his quality and merit, would explain himself to him, and discover the most secret recesses of his heart. He told him, that whatever pomp and outfide might be annexed to his dignity, yet his authority was not answerable to it; that it was not always in his power to follow the impulse of his courage; and that he was the dependant of a prince, who, in order not to expose his own reputation, or bring himself into any difficulties, often left his ministers to guess at his intentions; that ever fince he had funcied, from some hints, that he would not be displeased that Malta should be succoured, his first design was to go with all his master's naval force to fight the Turkish admiral; but not having a furficient number of vessels for that purpose, he had resolved, in concert with the grand master, to throw a body of ten thousand men at least into the island; that he would lead this fuccour in person; that the chevalier Vincent Anastagi, an excellent engineer, had furnished him with an exact plan of the island, and all the places proper for landing his troops; that the grand mafter had likeways fent him all the fignals and counter-figuals which they were to make from the fortreffes or the island, and the calle of Goza; and that he hoped to let out from Messina on the twenty-first of August at farthest. He kept his word, and arrived on the twenty-fecond at Syracufe, which was the general rendezvous of the whole army; when making a general review, it was found to confift of near eight thousand men, most of them old soldiers, and veteran bodies, that had ferved in all the wars of Italy.

ALVAREZ

patched

ALVAREZ de Sande commanded the regiment of Naples; Sancho de Londono that of Milan; Vincent Vitelli was at the head of a great body of volunteers of Italy and other nations; and Afcanio della Corna was appointed major-general during their voyage. The viceroy kept the fupreme command in his own bands, till fuch time as the troops should be landed: but after his departure the council of war, till they should have joined the grand master, was to determine of all enterprizes by a plurality of voices, and the orders were to be given in the name of his catholic majesty.

On the first of September all the fleet hoisted sail, and fet out under the discharge of all the artillery, and with the shouts of the whole army. The rendezvous was at the little isle of Linola; they met with bad weather, which dispersed their ships, and drove them out of their course, but when the storm was over, the viceroy, in order to give them time to come up with him, as well as to refresh the soldiers, after the fatigue of the sea, put into Favignana, a little island near Trapini in Sicily. On the fourth, the fleet put to sea again, and arrived at the little island of Linosa, where the viceroy met with letters from the grand mafter, by which he acquainted him, that he might fafely make a descent about Mugiaro, and the road of Melecca, where there was good anchoring. But the viceroy's motions gave them fresh reason to suspect that he did not intend to make any use of this advice; for he, instead of entring the channel of Goza, failed along the fouth coast of the isse of Malta, and suffered himself to be discovered by the Turkish frigates that came out of Marza Siroc. One would have thought, that he did not fo much want to land, as to find some opposition that might oblige him to tack about, and return into the ports of Sicily. The usual accidents that happen at sea furnished him with one to his mind; for there rose in the night a strong gale of wind mixed with rain, which blew with fo much violence, that the van-guard, commanded by Cardona, was separated from the rest of the fleet. The weather proving calm in the morning, the viceroy dif-

patched fome light frigates to learn whither the wind had driven him; but they, not meeting with any account of him, he tacked about a fecond time, and flood away for Sicily, doubled cape Paffaro, and put in at Paffal, where Cardona, who had been in quest of him to no purpose at Goza, came up and joined him; but he had first landed his troops. Every body then began to doubt of the fuccour, and they faid publicly, that if it were possible to save Malta, nothing but the invincible valour of the knights could effect it. Such of them as were on board the fleet openly expressed their detestation of the viceroy's timorous prudence, and the excessive precaution he used; and to make the misfortune still greater, above one thousand five hundred soldiers deferted, to that the army was in a few days reduced to less than fix thousand men. The viceroy. startled at so considerable a desertion, relapsed into his utual irrefolution: upon which he called a council of war, where he again proposed to them whether or no it might be proper to attempt the relief of Malta. Whish they were debating this question, a great noise of confused voices and cries was heard at the councildoor, demanding that they should set fail immediately. The general officers, who, out of complaifance to the viceroy, had given their opinion in a doubtful and ambiguous manner, were well enough pleased to see the foldiers, who had no measures to keep, come and explain their real fentiments in a bolder manner. viceroy, by the air of their countenace, and the filence they kept in the midst of a tumult, which their own foldiers had raised, easily penetrated into their real intentions. He stood out no longer. So that he might no longer refift the real fentiments and wishes of the council and the whole army, they reimbarked on the fixth. and arrived the same day in the afternoon within sight of Malta. All the fleet shouted for joy when they entered the streight or channel of Goza: but the viceroy, not willing to run the hazard of landing in the night, they, by his orders, came to an anchor, and ranged themselves near the little isles of Comino and Cominote.

The

The next day in the morning, being the feventh, the fleet put into the road of Melecca, and landed all the troops, arms, ammunition and provisions deligned for the reinforcement. The viceroy went ashore to review them: and, as foon as he had feen them on their march towards the Notable city, he reimbarked according to his mafter's orders, and returned to Sicily. But he, before his departure, at his taking leave of the general officers, promifed to bring them, by the thirteenth or fourteenth of the month, a reinforcement of four thousand men more which he expected from Italy, and which, as he told them, were by that time landed at Messina. There arrived likewise, at the same time, several young French noblemen and gentlemen, who flocked thither, out of an eager defire to fignalize their courage against the infidels. Among these, says M. de Thou, they reckoned Philip, fon to Peter Strozzi, a marshal of France; Timoleon of Coste Brissic, son to another marshal of France: Roger de Saint Larry of Bellegarde; Peter de Bourdeilles of Brantôme; Hardouin de Villiers, Lord la Riviere; and a few days before them, René le Voyer, viscount Paulmi, and bailiff of Touraine, had landed in that island, in order to go to the succour of an order, which, for three hunred years past, had reckoned several of his ancestors in the number of its most illustrious knights. All these young noblemen were eager to embark with the new reinforcement which was expected from Italy.

MUSTAPHA and Piali, on the report of their spies, had always imagined, that the viceroy's view in assembling together all the ships and gallies that were in the ports of Sicily, was only to try the fate of a sea engagement, in order to open himself a way for the landing of his succours in the great port at the foot of the castle of St. Angelo. But the basha, to defeat his design, had a few days before, barred up the entrance of it with a chain of sail-yards, piles and boats: and ever since the Christian sheet had first appeared off Linosa, the Turkish admiral, with all his naval force, had lain continually at anchor

chor before the great port, in order to hinder the Christians from enteringit.

THE landing of the fuccours in a quite contrary part of the island threw both the generals into a terrible consternation: they were every moment asraid of being attacked by the principal forces of Christendom; so that without informing themselves, according to the rules of war, of the number of men that were in the reinforcement, they raited the flege in a hurry, drew their garrifon out of fort St. Elmo, left their heavy cannon behind, and embarked with a precipitation which differed very little from a downright flight. The basha. was no fooner abroad, but he grew ashamed of having fuffered himself to be surprised by so sudden a terror. A flave, who had made his eleane out of the greattown, added greatly to his confusion, by telling him, that the reinforcement which had made fixteen thousand men take to their heels, did not confift of above fix thousand, and those too harrassed by the voyage, having no general at their head, and commanded only by officers who were independent from one another, and not well united among themselves; and that it was believed, that were they to see the Turks in their first posts, they would not dare to quit the rocks and passes in which they had intrenched themselves. But the advice came too late, and the infidels, unless they had been minded to begin the fiege a-new. could not depend upon their lines and intrenchments.

The grand mafter no fooner faw them gone off, and bufy in reimbarking, but he ordered their trenches to be filled up, and their works to be ruined. All the inhabitants, men, women and children, and even the knights, worked at it day and night with that joy and alacrity, which prifoners feel when they are allowed to knock off their fetters. The grand mafter at the fame time fent a garrifon into fort St. Elmo, and the Turks faw from on board their fleet the standard of St. John again set up, to their infinite grief and consu-

Gon.

THE basha, who was afraid his head would answer for this ill fuccess, and that the fultan would reproach him with not having dared to look his enemies in the face, summoned a council of war, and a long debate ensued about the measures proper to be taken. The viceroy of Algiers was of opinion, that they should land the troops again, and advance to attack the enemy. He represented to the basha, that in case they were no more than fix thousand men, he might fight them with double that number; that if he should get the better, which he might justly expect, his victory would prevent the fecond reinforcement that the viceroy of Sicily was to bring, from entring the island; and that the knights, who were quite spent, as well as reduced to a small number, and in great want of soldiers, would be forced to capitulate. Piali, who was iealous of Mustapha's credit. and was not forry that he had miscarried in his enterprise, was of a different opinion, and faid, that after they had lost the flower of the Ottoman army, it would be dangerous to expose what was left of their troops, and they dispirited and haraffed by a long fiege, to an engagement of a fresh body of men, who were impatient of fighting. But the opinion of the viceroy of Algiers, in favour of which the basha had declared, carried it by two votes; fo that the landing was resolved on; and the basha, enraged at himself for having raised the siege in such a hurry, and terribly afraid of the reception he should meet with at the porte, in case he returned unsucceisful, resolved either to conquer, or die at the head of his troops, rather than to be put to death by the infamous hands of an executioner; upon which he immediately went ashore himself; but he could hardly prevail with his foldiers to leave the ships. They all made heavy complaints at their being forced, after so tedious and bloody a fiege, to return back again to the flaughter. They were obliged to be torn in a manner from on board, and their officers could not get them to go ashore without using violence. The basha marched with the best part of them towards the Notable city, where he flattered himself he should meet the Christians. And, in order to secure his retreat on board his shipsin case of ill success, he left the viceroy of Algiers, at the head of sifteen hundred men by the sea-side. Piali, who, ever since the knights had taken possession of for St. Elmo, could not continue any longer in port Muzet, in concert with these two generals, put in with his sleet into the road of St. Paul.

The basha, after having thus settled matters, advanced in search of the reinforcement. Ascanio della Corna, who acted as major-general, had intrenched it on an hill, which was very difficult of access, by reason of the defiles or narrow passages that surrounded it.

THE grand master, ever attentive in observing all the motions of the infidels, fent advice to the Christian generals, that the Turks were advancing forward in order to fall upon them with all their forces; upon which they immediately called a council of war. canio was of opinion, that they should wait the coming up of the enemy in their camp, representing, that it would be impossible for the Turks to attack a place in front which was fo strong by its situation, without exposing themselves to all the fire of their artillery; that they were covered by the city on that fide, and on the other, by a monastery that was fortified by nature. in which they had thrown a body of troops, and that the infidels must pass under all their fire before they could fall upon his camp; that as the enemy had brought no provisions nor equipages along with them, they could not possibly stay long in the plain, as they would be so much exposed to the excessive heat of the fun, and that after a few light skirmishes, they, without running any hazard, would force them to retire and embark on board their ships again.

But Alvarez de Sande, the most considerable officer in all the army, was of a contrary opinion, and, in all probability, had a mind, by giving a bold advice, and suitable to his courage, to wipe out the remembrance of that which he had given out of complaisance for the viceroy in the council held at Mcffina, where he had opposed the sending of any succour to Malta; and therefore now declared, that his opinion was, they should draw the whole army out of the camp, and march down the hill to meet the enemy. "We are not add vanced so forward, (replied he to Ascanio) to run no hazard, and remain idle spectators of a new storm, which the insidels, if they see they cannot force our intrenchments, will probably attempt upon the great town or the castle of St. Michael. We cannot tell how manfully the Turks may behave when urged by descipair: and what a shame will it be for us to stand looking on, whilst they are carrying those places, which after all have no walls, nor any fortifications left, but the bodies only of the knights who defend them?

OF these two opinions proposed in the council of the Christians, the one was safe, and the other more daring, but at the same time more glorious for him who gave it. Most of the officers were for the latter; and the knights, who came in the Sicilian fleet, were particularly eager for their coming to an engagement. There were at least two hundred knights and commanders; and there was hardly one of the latter but what had brought with him feveral volunteers who were either his friends or relations and a pretty good number of foldiers; these, united, formed one of the strongest battalions of the army; and they declared, that in case the troops did not quit their intrenchments, they were refolved, though they were all to perish to the last man, to break through the enemy's army, and throw themfelves into the places belieged.

But they were not obtiged to come to such a sad extremity; for de Sande carried it by a plurality of voices: upon which, he marched down into the plain, at the head of the battalion of the order, followed by all the troops, and by Ascanio himself; who, after having protested against the ill consequences that might happen from an enterprise which he termed rash, was nevertheless resolved to share in the danger: with a pike in his hand he mixed among the knights, fought in the first ranks, and manifested by his bravery, that those who are fometimes accused of too much circumspection in council, are not upon that account less valiant in action. The Christians fought with great courage and resolution. De Sande, at the head of the knights, made a furious charge upon the infidels, whilft Vitelli attacked them in the flank. The Turkish soldiers, who had been dragged against their wills to the engagement, either out of resentment against their general, or because they were quite spent with the heat, were so far from making any gallant efforts to obtain the victory, that they hardly fo much as fought. The greatest part of them fired only one volley, and, finding themselves briskly attacked by the Christians, they broke, and thamefully took to their heels. The basha, seeing himself deserted by his men, was reduced, in spite of his courage, to the fad necessity of following the cowards, for fear of falling into the hands of the Christians. It is faid, that he was fo confused and perplexed at the defeat of his troops, that as he was making off, he fell twice from his horse, and would have certainly been taken, had not some officers ventured their lives or liberties to fave him, by halting to give him time to remount on horseback.

Vot. V. in

The Christians pursued the insidels briskly; their eagerness to pursue the enemy, made them insensible to the burning heat of the sun. The greatest part of the knights, who were heavy armed, threw off their cuirasses, in order to pursue the Turks the closer; and though most of the insidels they came up with were unable to make the least resistance, but lay extended on the ground, half dead with thirst and weariness, they nevertheless put them all to the sword. It was with instinite difficulty, and a considerable loss, that the Furks made a shift to get to the sea-side. Hitherto the Christians had found it more difficult to come up with their enemies than to sight them; but as the lightest and nimblest of them, sushed with their victory, and eager to pursue the run-aways, had broke their ranks, and run up and down without any order, the viceroy of Algiers, who lay concealed behind the point of a rock, fallied out of his ambush with his troops; and, seeing they were but sew in number, fell upon them, killed several of them, and took the chevaliers Mare de Toledo, Peter de Yala, Ribatajada, and an English knight, whose name is not mentioned, prisoners. But happily Alvarez de Sande came up before the combat was ended, with some battalions, who charged the Algeriues desperately; and the rest of the Christian troops coming up one after another, they carried all before them, cut to pieces all such as offered to resist, rescued the prisoners, and the Turks, whom fear had already vanquished, left off sighting, and fied to their ships, which gave occasion to a new kind of fighting.

ADMIRAL Piali, in order to favour the retreat of the Turks, did not only make use of the artillery of his gallies, but had lined the shore with shallops manned with his best musketeers, who made a continual fire upon the Christians. But the knights and soldiers, in their eagerness to pursue their enemies, and vexation to fee any of them elcape, followed them into the lea, in contempt of the fire and other dangers with which they were threatned; and some of them running up almost breast high into the water, killed the Turks with the shot from their small arms, just as they were getting into their gallies. Historians tell us, that the Turks lost in these several combats, and during the course of the siege, at least thirty thousand men. The admiral, after having taken on board the poor remains of this once formidable army, fet fail, and stood away for Sicily. The viceroy, seeing from the castle of a Syragoffa the Turkish fleet pass by, was informed without an express of the happy fuccess of his reinforcement, and the raising of the siege.

THE grand leignior was prodigionfly troubled when he received the news; he threw the letter he received a It is the old Syracufe, new called in the language of the countery, Saragoffa.

F 2 from

from Mustapha on that subject upon the ground, and, stamping upon it, cried out, that his enterprises never fucceeded but when he himself went in person, and that he would absolutely go the next spring to Malta. when he would put all the knights and inhabitants to the fword. However, that he might not leffen the reputation of his arms, and in order to amuse the people, who are ever fond of being deceived, he, instead of following the barbarous policy of his predeceffors, who used to punish the ill success of their generals as a crime, ordered it to be given out at Constantinople. that the basha had reduced the island, and brought away the greatest part of the knights and people as captives; but that as he had not thought proper to leave any of his troops in garrion upon a rock, and in a little defart island et such a distance. he had blown up all the forts, and destroyed the houses; and that in case any Christian cortain should be rash enough to return thither again, they would always be a prey to his fleets. and lie exposed to the mercy of every potentate who should have flers out at fea.

However exaggerated these reports might be, 'tis certain, that, after the siege was raised, the city, or what they cailed the great town of Malta, had less the air of a place which had been well desended, than of a city taken by storm; and which had been demolished, plandered, destroyed, and abandoned by the enemy. More than two hundred and sixty knights had been killed in the several assaults: and 'tis computed, that eight thousand men, either soldiers or inhabitants, perished in the siege: and when the Turks went off, there was searce in the great town and the castle of St. Michael, including the knights, six hundred men able to bear arms, most of whom were covered with wounds.

THIS great loss was a cribed not only to the valour of the Turks, but also to the affected delays of the viceroy: his very name was had in detellation by all the knights, of the several nations of Christendom: the grand master likewise complained of him afterwards to the pope.

pope. His holiness wrote to the like effect to the king of Spain; and though the viceroy in all this conduct, had only followed the private orders he had received from him, nevertheless, Philip, in order to prevent any room for suspicion, condemned these delays publicly, and sometime afterwards, removed the viceroy from Sicily: and, notwithstanding his having received great services from him, he nevertheless let him larger out the remainder of his days at Naples in obscurity, without giving him the least share in the government.

WHILST the auxiliary foldiers, who had relieved the place, were retired near the Notable city, in order to refresh themselves after the slight of the Turks, the principal officers and all the knights, who came with the reinforcement, went to the great town to pay their compliments to the grand mafter. They were wel-comed by him, by the knights of the place, and by all the inhabitants, as their deliverers. The knights embraced one another with great affection and tenderness; but when they came to call to mind the loss they had lately fultained, by the death of the most illustrious and bravest knights of the order, and considered the deplorable condition of the places which had been befleged, the walls and fortifications in rains; the artillery for the most part difinounted; the houses either demolished or ready to fall; the magazines without powder, ammunition or provisions; the inhabitants pale and ghastly; the knights and the grand master himself, with their beards and hair rough and neglected, and their cloaths dirty and in a flovenly condition, like men that had scarce been in bed for four months together, and several of those brave knights still wearing the honourable bandages which covered their wounds; this moving spectacle drew tears from their eyes, so much were they affected, either with the remembrance of patt difasters, or with joy that Malta had been saved at last; and, in order to perpetuate the memory of the great events that had happened there; as the great town had been the principal scene of them, they gave it the name-F 3 of the Victorious City, which it still retains to this day. Twas there the grand master entertained the generals of the auxiliary troops, lodging them in those places which had been least damaged by the Turkish artillery: they were treated in an honourable manner, and with as much plenty as could be expected in a place that had but just sustained a siege for four months together. The grand mafter's obliging behaviour, and the example of his frugality, made amends for what was wanting in the delicacy of their cheer; and when they came to take leave of him, he made them very handsome presents, and distributed considerable sums of money among their foldiers. The treasury of the order was now quite drained, and la Valette reserved nothing as it were, but the hopes of filling it again afterwards with the plunder of the infidels; it was indeed a pretty fure fund, and had never failed them for feveral ages together.

The news of the defeat of the Turks was soon spread over all Christendom; it occasioned an universal joy, and was celebrated with illuminations, bonesires, and public thanksgivings. The name of la Valette was renowned in all nations, especially in Italy and Spain, whose inhabitants were obliged to the knights for the guard and protection of their maritime provinces. Pope Pius IV. and Philip king of Spain, who were the most interested in the preservation of a place which was of such service to them, gave to its intrepid defender the most honourable testimonies of their esteem and gratitude.

The governor of Rome, by his holine's's order, notified the raifing of the fiege of Malta to the Romans by the discharge of all his artillery, by bonefires and illuminations, which were made all over the city. The day was kept as a public festival; the magistrates did no business; the tradesimen shut up their shops; in short, there was no place open but the churches; into which the people slocked in crowds, in order to return God thanks for the happy success. All the inhabitants of Spain and Italy, whose fortunes lay on the sea-coast, thought themselves, after raising of the siege, secure from the descents and incursions of the corfairs.

thought

Bur Pius IV, that his acknowledgments might not confult meerly in empty praise, sent the grand master word of his being refolved to make him immediately a cardinal. But at the return of the express, they were furprised to hear that he had excused himself from accepting a dignity, which had ever been confidered as the testimony and reward of merit, sometimes indeed the price of favour, but always the object of the ambition of the greatest prelates, and sought for as an honour by the ions of kings. The reason which la Valette gave for his declining it was, that he was afraid of confounding the dignity of grand master and cardinal together; two great offices, which, he said, required different functions, and which, instead of supporting, would, on the contrary, be ever interfering with one another. There were forne, who, calling to mind that the grand mafter d'Aubusson had made no fuch scruple, took occasion, from la Valette's refusing it, to commend him very much upon that account, and to ascribe it to his great modesty: others suspected that there was as much policy as modelty in his refusal, and that the grand malter, justly looking upon himself as a fovereign prince, fancied he should lessen his dignity, was he to accept of one that was subordinate. But whatever were his motives, he defired his holiness to bestow that honour upon one of his brothers, who was bishop of Vabres; but the pope's death happening soon after, hindred the French prelate from reaping any benefit from the grand master's recommendation.

In the first transports of joy, which the brave defence made by la Valette, and the raising of the siege, occasioned over all Europe, and especially in Italy, nothing could hardly have been refused to a man whom they looked upon as the hero of Christendom. He received compliments from all quarters upon his success. The king of Spain, who, as Malta secured his kingdoms of Sicily and Naples, was particularly concerned in its preservation, sent him the commander Maldonat, to present him in full council with a sword and dagger, the hilt of which was of massy gold, set with diamonds: and in a kind of harangue which he made on this occasion, he said, that the king his master, considering him as one of the greatest captains of the age, desired him to employ those arms for the desence of Christendom.

NOTWITHSTANDING the grand master received at the same time compliments of the like nature from most of the princes of Europe, yet these honourable deputations could not secure the tears he justly entertained of what might afterwards happen. The fiege indeed was raifed, and the enemy was retired, but then they were making new preparations in the port of Constantinople. All the news that came from the east brought repeated affurances that the grand fignior, being enraged at the ill fuccess of his arms under Musta. pha's conduct, had declared that he himself would go in person the next spring, at the head of a formidable army, in order to fall upon Malta. And in what a condition had his troops, though they had not taken the places they had belieged, left the whole island? The country was destitute of inhabitants, the villages and hamlets were most of them burnt; the great town, where the convent relided, and the forts of St. Elmo and St. Michael were left without walls; their fortifications ruined; the artillery either dilinounted or burft; the houses demolished, the cisterns without water, the magazines empty, no provisions for their support, nor money to buy any; few foldiers, and still fewer knights left in the forts. Malta, in this deplorable condition, appeared to him as much in danger as it had been during the fiege.

THESE dismal reflections would not suffer him to take any rest; when communicating his sentiments to some old commanders, who sympathised with him in his uncasiness, they thought it adviseable for them to abandon an island which they could never be able to defend, and transport the convent to Sicily. But la Valette, excited by the glary he had acquired in Malta, refoly-

resolved to bury himself under its ruins rather than leave it; when, at last, the extremity to which he was reduced put him upon expedients which nothing but despair could justify, and which a great many generals would have ferupled to make use of.

THE grand fignior could not come to Malta, without a strong fleet soitable to his dignity, and sufficient to transport the troops he intended to employ in that expedition. They were continually at work for that purpose in the arienal of Constantinople, and a good number of gallies and galliots were already on the stocks. The grand master, knowing this armament was defigned against him, found means to get the arsenal fet on fire; the force of the powder blew up the magazines; most of the gallies, which were not yet finished, were consumed; and a great number of workmen perished in the flames. The author of this enterprize was not known for a long time; however, it anfwered his end, and the war of Malta was put off to another time. Solvman, not finding himfelf in a condition to fit out a fleet fuitable to the enterprise, and superior to that of the Christians, turned his arms against Hungary, and ended his days at the fiege of Sigeth. Selimus the fecond, his fon, afterwards declared war against the Venetians; and a certain historian says, it was only by way of reprifals for the barning of the arfenal of Constantinople, that he got the arienal of Venice set on fire a little before his invasion of Cy-

THE grand master, seeing that he had nothing to fear from Solyman, at least for the ensuing campaign, resolved to employ the time allowed him, in repairing the several fortifications the Turks had ruined; and, for the better seemity of both the ports, proposed the building a new fortress in the Peninsula which separates them from one another. We have just now observed, that of all the several places which had been fortified before the siege, there was none of them better situated than fort St. Elmo, especially if it had been built more regularly. It was in a manner the key of both ports. The grand master, without neglecting to take care of the other ports, formed a design of enlarging this, and of adding new works to it, and resolved likeways to build a town upon the same neck of land, to strengthen it with all the fortifications that art could possibly invent, and to make it the residence of the knights. His opinion was, that they would be much safer there than in the great town, which was commanded on all sides by the rocks and hills with which it was surrounded.

For the execution of this project, great supplies were necessary, which could only be expected from the principal fovereigns of Christendom. The grand master sent embassadors to the pope, to the kings of France, Spain, and Portugal, and to several Italian potentates, to reprefent to them, that the late faving of Malta, by the gallant defence that was made, would be of little use, if care was not taken for its future security by immediately repairing the fortifications of those places which had been ruined by the artillery of the Turks. These ministers had likeways orders to acquaint them with la Valette's design of building a new city; to shew them the plan he had drawn of it; and to defire from them, at the same time, the supplies neceffury for fetting about fuch a confiderable work. All thele princes gave fresh applause to the grand master's zeal; and in order to assist him in the undertaking, the pope promised him 15,000 crowns; the king of France 140,000 livres, which were to be raised out of the tithes of his kingdom; Philip II. 90,000 livres; and the king of Portugal 20,000 cruladoes: befides which, most of the commanders of the order made very generous contributions out of their own private fortunes, and fold even their richest furniture and effects; the money arising from which they remitted to Malta.

THE grand master, encouraged by these supplies, fent for engineers and workmen from several parts of Italy. When the lines for the new city and fortifications were marked out, la Valette went in his robes, attended attended by the council, and all the knights, in great ceremony, to mount Sceberras, where he laid the first stone of the new city, upon which the order of council was engraved in Latin, almost in these words: "The most illustrious and most reverend lord, bro-" ther John de la Valette, grand master of the order " of St. John of Jerusalem, both hospitaller and military, confidering all the perils to which his knights " and people of Malta were exposed at the last fiege " by the infidels; and having, with the approbation " of the council of the order, and for the better oppo-" fing any new enterprises from those barbarians, re-" folved to build a town upon mount Sceberras; the " faid grand mafter has this day, being Thursday the " twenty-eighth of the month of March, of the present " year 1566, (after having called upon the holy name " of God, and belought the interceilion of the holy " virgin his mother, and of St. John Baptist, titulary patron of the order, to obtain the bleffing of heaven " upon this important work) laid the first stone of it, " with his arms, which are a lion d or in a field gules " engraved upon it; and the new town, by his order, " has been named the city of la Valette."

To perpetuate to the most distant posterity the memory of so remarkable an event, they threw on the foundation a great quantity of gold and silver medals, on which the new city was represented, with this infeription, MELITA RENASCENS, Malta springing up again, and in the exerge, they put the day and year of its foundation.

As foon as the ceremony was over, the work began again, and was carried on with the utmost application; every one in his way, and without any distinction of the richest citizen from the poorest inhabitant, employed himself with that pleasure and eagerness, with which a work is followed when the common safety depends wholly upon it. The commander de la Fontaine, a person much esteemed for his skill in fortification, had the principal direction, and a kind of superintendency over all the works. Every knight contributed to it according as he was qualified. Some went with the gallies of the order, to fetch materials from different ports of Sicily and Italy; others went no farther than Messina and Syracuse, whilst others again passed as far as Lyons to have the artillery new cast. Several worked at the head of a great number of pioneers in filling up the trenches, or clearing the breaches of the rubbish of the wall which the cannon had beat down; and others took care to get stones carried for repairing the old fortifications, or building new ones.

In this military republic, every one was in action, every one at work; the grand mafter in particular, for near two years together, never left the workmen he employed in the new city: he fpent whole days among them, and eat his meals in the midft of the carpenters and masons, as if he had been one of their number; and so intent was he upon forwarding the work, that that he frequently gave his audiences and orders there.

In this multitude and variety of business, which he had upon his hands, nothing gave him greater uneafiness than the want of money for paying the workmen; the receivers of the order, in the provinces beyond sea, not being always fo regular as they should be in remitting it. The grand master, to supply this defect, coined some brass money, which he made of different value, according to the fize of the pieces. On one fide there were two hands joined together, and on the other the arms of la Valette, quartered with those of the order, and for the legend these latin words, NON ÆS, SED FIDES: "Do not regard fo much " the metal, as the inviolable promise given you to " take it again." And in fact, as ioon as ever they had money, they did not fail to call in these pieces; and by this exactness, their credit was so well established among the people, that the work was not once difcontinued, or even flackned.

In the midft of these cares, so worthy of a prince and an illustrious warrior, there arose some troubles which disturbed the tranquillity of the government: for some young Spanish knights, fancying any liberties might be allowed

allowed in the midst of the rejoicings, which the defeat of the Turks occasioned, confumed their time in feafting and drinking, which they often intermixed with fatyrical fongs; and wherein, under a pretence of being witty, and of throwing out their jests, they attacked the reputation of the bravest knights, and the honour of the principal ladies of Malta. These songs were foon made public, and complaint was made about them to the grand master, who, as he was a strict obferver of exact discipline, conceived a very just indignation at the hearing of these irregularities, and accordingly directed the council, and principal officers of the order, to examine into them. The authors of these defamatory libels were discovered, and a prosecution was carried on against them. Whilft they were going on with it in full council, these young libertines, forgetting the respect they owed to the grand master, who prefided there in person, broke into the chamber, fnatched the pen out of the vice-chancellor's hand, with which he was writing the fentence pronounced against the criminals, and threw his inkhorn out of the window. This being done, the mutineers flung out of the room, and, by the help of their fecret accomplices and friends, got to the fea fide, where they went on board some light reluccas, and made their escape to Sicily. The grand mafter, meenfed as fuch an unprecedented infurrection, degraded them from the order, and condemned them in case of their being taken, to perpetual impilionment. He dispatched, at the same time, the chevalier Caprona to the viceroy of Sicily to demand them as rebels and deferters. But whatever real or presended orders the viceroy might have iffued out, they either could not or would not find them. These knights however did not stay any time in Sicily; for, as they knew the grand mafter's firm and inflexible temper, they thought it best to retire into their respective countries. They flattered themselves, that as la Valette was very old, he might have a successor who should be less severe, and perhaps have less credit; that time would at least be of advantage to them, as it would wear off the first impressions, and thereby lessen the greatness of their offence.

Vol. V. G tage

An affair of so vexatious a nature, and which, at the same time, was so dangerous a precedent, was scarce over, when another happened that gave the grand master fresh uneasiness. One Bonaccursi, a Florentine, who was settled at Malta, had there married a young lady of exquisite beauty, and the grand master's god-daughter. She was originally of the isle of Rhodes, descended of those noble Rhodians who came away with l'Isle-Adam, and followed the fortune of the order.

THE Florentine, transported with rage and jealoufv. stabbed his wife; and notwithstanding all the endeavours the grand mafter used to have him seized, his countrymen, whether knights or others, found means, in order to save him from the punishment of the law, to ship him off to Italy; a country, where murders, occasioned by jealousy, are oftner connived at than punished. The grand master, in the midst of all the glory with which he was furrounded, was full of the highest resentments at the insults with which private men dared to wound his fovereign authority. was inviolaby attached to the observance of the laws, was a true judge of merit, and a fevere avenger of guilt, he neither suffered virtue to pass without a recompence, nor faults without chastisement. These great qualities made him equally dreaded and respected; and it was never known, during his administration, that either credit or favour had any weight with him; or that he was ever liberal or munificent but to those who justly merited it.

This laudable steadines however embroiled him with the pope, and occasioned a new subject of discontent, which did not a little contribute to the shortning of so illustrious a life. Some cardinals, thirsting after the great estates which the order possessed in the several states of Christendom, and particularly in Rome and Italy, had infinuated to several popes, that the disposal of the first dignities of this military order belonged to them, as the first superiors of the whole body. Upon this pretence, the popes had frequently conferred the grand priory of Rome upon cardinals their nephews, and exerted the plenitude of the power of the keys, in granting dispensations to qualify them to possess that military dignity. Upon this principle, the priory of Rome had passed successively through the hands of several persons of the sacred college.

ed

LA VALETTE could not bear to see this misapplication of the estates of the order, without using his utmost endeavours to redress it. He had no views, no passion, but what terminated in the glory and interest of his order, which indeed may be faid to be those of Christendom: so that he could not forbear writing about it to his holiness in very pressing terms. The pope, fince the raifing of the fiege of Malta, had fent him several briefs, which were full of pompous declarations of his efteem, and the deep sense he had of his fervices. The grand mafter answered him, that all the recompence he defired was, that he would leave to his order the disposal of the grand priory of Rome. Pius V. finding his request as difinterested with respect to himself, as it was just with regard to his knights, asfured him, by a particular brief, that he, whenever it should fall vacant, would not disturb the order in the enjoyment of its rights. Nevertheless, cardinal Bernardini Salviati, who was then grand prior of Rome, dying, Pius V. made no fcruple to confer that rich dignity upon cardinal Alexandrino his nephew, without so much as subjecting him, as the other cardinal grand priors had been obliged, to pay the usual responsions and quit-rents into the common treasury of the order.

The grand master was sensibly concerned at this breach of promise, especially in a pope who was still holier, by the purity of his morals, and his eminent piety, than by his dignity, though it be the first of the Christian world. He immediately wrote to him on that subject in very warm terms; and the chevalier de Cambian, his embassador, delivered his letter, in which he represented to him, that if the cardinals of every nation should seize on the most considerable estates of the order, they would be left without any fund to enable them, pursuant to the intentions of their founders, to defend the Christian ships and coasts, and to carry on the war against the insidels. The holy father was touched with the force of these reasons, and seemed disposed to restore the priory to the order: but as the terms of the grand master's letter were not guarded enough, and that the embassador had, of his own head, been so imprudent as to disperse copies of it, the pope, offended at this breach of respect, ordered Cambian not to come into his presence. This gave the grand master fresh uneasiness, which, added to the vexation the young knights had given him, threw him into a deep melancholy.

LA VALETTE, in order to divert it, got on horseback a few days afterwards, and, being attended with his hunting equipage, went to a plain near the leeshore of St. Paul, to amuse himself with hawking. But that day, which was July the 19th, proving excessive hot, he was struck with a coup de soleil, which forced him to leave his fport, and occasioned a violent fever. A few days after, his illness not allowing him to apply himself so much as was necessary to the affairs of government, he empowered his lords of council to take them into their hands. His distemper lasted near three weeks longer, and grew daily more and more dangerous; when, at length, finding his strength decay, and his end drawing near, he prepared himself for it like a good Christian, and a true religious. He received all the facraments with great fervor and piety; and as he had renounced all property, by the vow he made of poverty at his admission into the order, that he might die in the same sentiments, he would not offer to make over any of his effects without the permission of the council, and therefore defired their leave to dispose of sifty slaves that belonged to him, and likeways the fum of 12,000 li-Part of this money he employed in endowing a chappel which he had built in the new city, where he defired defired to be buried, and the rest he gave away in legacies to his fervants.

HE afterwards fent for the lords of the council, and the principal commanders and knights, who were then at Malta, and exhorted them, in the most moving language, to maintain peace and unity among themfelves, and to be exact in discharging their vow of obedience to the grand mafter, who should be chosen to succeed him. We are told that he recommended to their choice brother Anthony de Toledo, grand prior of Castile, as a man who was most capable of supporting the dignity of the order. He declared that he forgave the knights who had offended him, and defired the lords of the council to re-admit the young knights, whom he had degraded of the habit, in case they thought it could be done without prejudice to their rules and institutions. Then addressing himself particularly to his nephews, he told them, that the practice of all the virtues of their condition would be the only path that would lead them to those dignities and that respect which ambitious men endeavour so eagerly to gain by cabais and the interest of the great. He then took leave of them all, and would not hear of any thing but what related to his falvation. A little after he felt the approaches of death. This warrior, who, during his whole life-time, and in the midst of the greatest dangers, had faced death with so much intrepidity, was at that instant seized with a religiou-terror: they heard him call feveral times on his good angel for his assistance; but these clouds were soon blown over, and he furmounted the horrors of this last combut with an entire confidence of God's mercy: his mind was calmed, and the serenity of it appeared in his countenance, when, at last, calling devoutly on the holy name of IESUS and MARY, he ended an illustrious life by a peaceable and Christian death, upon the 21st of August 1568. His body was laid in the church of St. Laurence, in the chapel of St. Mary de Philermo, till fuch time as it could be removed into that of St. G_3 Mary

Mary of Victory, which he had ordered to be built in the new city of la Valette, where he had defired to be buried; and it was accordingly carried thither after the election of his fucceffor.

THE convent met the next day to proceed to the Had the intentions of the last grand master been followed, don Antonio de Toledo, of the same family with the famous duke of Alva, would have been chosen his successor. He was a knight of singular valour, an excellent general; was generous, liberal, and, what was still more considerable, had a foul informed with the highest sentiments of piety and religion, and was particularly strict in the observance of the rules and flatutes of the order; but, with all these shining qualities, a little too fond of his high birth. This turn of mind, which it is even dangerous to discover in a republic composed of nobility and gentry; a certain air of haughtiness which he affected; the very recommendation of la Valette, which, because of the strictness of his administration, was disagreeable to several knights; all these circumstances gave them reason to apprehend that Teledo would refemble him as much in his steadiness as he did in his valour, which, for that reason, turned all the votes of the affembly another way. There were feveral candidates, all of them great croffes, of the first and most ancient knights of the order.

St. Clement aspired to this dignity: he was a Spanish knight, pilier of the language of Arragon; his age, his long residence in the convent, his modefty, and his having past through most of the dignities of the order, might have naturally led him to the first; but his excessive avarice, and his fordid niggardlines in house-keeping, which the knights of his inn had been sensible of to their cost, made him so odious and insupportable, that they would not so much as hear of his pretensions.

THERE were at that time in Malta two great croffes, the one a Frenchman, called la Motte, the other a Spaniard, whose name was Maldonat, both of them intimate

intimate friends: they had often been out a cruifing together; were both men of courage, and from a fimilitude of tempers and inclinations, had made as it were a kind of partnership of the glory and profit which accrued to them from their captures. These two commanders, even in la Valette's life time, seeing him advanced in years, and worn out with the fatigues of war, formed a project for making the grand maftership fall, after his death, to some great cross, who should be chiefly obliged to them for it. With this view they, from that time, made it their business to gain friends and creatures, and to make themselves the heads of a party who should have a great sway in the election. La Motte, who was polite, infinuating, and good-natured, found no difficulty in gaining over a great many friends. Maldonat was not possessed of these qualities, and was naturally proud and haughty: but then he supplied these defects by the frankness of his temper, the fums he generously spent, his liberality, and the good offices which he did those knights who had served under him, and in the gallies which he commanded. The day of the election being fixed, they went the evening before to the commander de Rivalle's: this gentleman was of the illustrious house of Ursini, was at that time great admiral of the order, at the head of the language of Italy, and had moreover a great number of creatures and partifans. Rivalle, imagining he should infallibly be elected, received them in his bed, and, upon their offering him their own votes, and those of their friends, he answered them only with a pretended moderation, and with an air that was cold enough. Upon which the two commanders went out of his apartment, difgusted at the mysterious air he affected, and affronted at his having received them in bed. Maldonat, who was naturally hot and proud, could not forbear faying, that he should be very much surprised, if a man who had kept his bed so late on the eve of the election, should be chose grand master the next day.

THE two commanders gave their friends an account of the haughty reception they had met with from the admiral;

admiral: upon which they agreed to give their votes for some other person. Maldonat endeavoured at this meeting to gain over the votes of the company for himfelf; but the knights, knowing his imperious temper, did not think him a fit man to prefide over persons of quality, who had been brought up in a spirit of liberty. They gave him however fome hopes, but that only in general terms, and he foon perceived that his most intimate friends would fail him on this occasion: la Motte likewise advised him to defist from an attempt that could not possibly succeed, whereupon they agreed together to declare in favour of the chevalier de Monte, grand prior of Capua, who was one of the candidates for the election, and had a confiderable party in his interest. They, in their resentment against Rivalle, had pitched upon Monte, in hopes, that, as they were all of the language of Italy, they might for that reason draw off a good number of the votes of that language from Rivalle. Accordingly the two friends went to his house. This gentleman had passed through all the employments and dignities of the order; had been zeneral of the gallies, admiral, governor of the castle of St. Angelo, and of the peninfula de la Sangle, where he had acquired no finall share of glory in the last siege. La Motte and Maldonat met with him in his hall, furrounded with a great number of knights. They, in like manner, as they had done to Rivalle, offered him their own votes, and those of their friends. Monte, knowing the credit and interest they would have in the election, was more politic on this occasion than Kivalle had been: he gave them a most obliging reception, and affured them of his highest acknowledgements.

THE whole convent met the next day in the church of the priory of St. John, when all the languages went into their respective chapels, in order to proceed to the choice of two electors for each language. La Motte was one of the number, and was chosen knight of the election. He had the dexterity to get the greatest part of the co-electors to be chosen from among such of his friends as he could most rely on. The president gave each of them a ballot, or voting-ball: but as there were fixteen electors, la Motte, as knight of the election, had two ballots, to prevent an equality of votes. After the oaths and ceremonies usually performed in these cases, the electors, by a plurality of voices, chose brother Peter De Monte for grand master. His name was Guidalotti; but as he was great uephew by the mother's side to pope

friends

PETER DE MONTE. 23 Aug. 1658.

Julius III, of the family of Monte, he, for that reason had affumed that name, which his valour, and the brave defence he had made at the fiege of Malta against the continual affaults, which the Turks had made both by sea and land upon the peninsula de la Sangle, had sufficiently illustrated. The first care of the new grand master was to pay the funeral honours to his predecessor: his body had been deposited, as was before observed, in the church of our lady of Philermo by the grand mafter's order; it was put on board the admiral galley, wich was without any equipage or mast, and was towed by two other gallies, both of them armed, hung with black cloth, and carrying feveral enfigns and banners, which he had taken from the Turks and other infidels, all of them traiting in the water. These were followed by two other gallies, which had belonged to the late grand mafter, covered with black cloth, and other funeral ornaments, having the grand mafter elect, the lords of the council, the commanders, and principal knights on board. This funeral procession went out of the great port in this folemn and mournful manner, and entered into that of Muset. The household of the deceased, his officers and fervants, all in deep mourning, went first on shore, most of whom had torches in their hands, and others carried the standards which had been taken from the Turks. The clergy marched after the prince's household, carrying his corps, and chanting the fervice of the church. After these came the grand mafter, and all the lords of the council, and were followed lowed by the body of the knights. The corps of the deccased was carried into the chapel of our lady of victory, which la Valette had built at his own expence, in the new city, which he had chose for the place of his burial, where they deposited his remains, and divine service was afterwards performed with all the ceremonies of the church, and all the honours due to the memory of so great a man.

The end of the Thirteenth Book.

BOOK the Fourteenth.

ADVERTISEMENT.

MONG the several authors who have writ the general history of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, whether in Italian, Latin, French or Spanish, not one of them has carried his account of it lower than the last siege of Malta: 1565. all these writers leave off, as it were by concert, at that famous epocha, fancying, probably, that they could not better end their works, than with the conclusion of that bloody war; perhaps too, as the forces of both parties, being equally exhausted, might have afterwards produced fewer of those great events that merit a place in history.

Whatever might have been their different motives, I have followed the same method in the plan and distribution of my work. The thirteenth book ends at the raising of the siege of Malta, and the deseat of Mustapha, general to Solyman II. I have only added what passed in the last years of la Valette's government till the death of that great man, the glory and ornament of his age, as well as of his order. If the history of a king ends generally with his life, it is not the same in that of a republic, which ought to be continued as long as the same form of government exists. So that the authors who, after me, shall transmit to posterity the series of events that have happened in this order, may begin where I leave off. However, till such time as some new writer shall think sit to continue it, or I myself may have health enough to collect memoirs, and carry on my history to our own times, I thought myself obliged, for the satisfaction of the public, to add, after the thirteen former books, a sourteenth in the form of annals, and by way of supplement, containing a summary account of the principal events that have happened in the order, from the election of the prior de Monte, the immediate successor of la Valette, to that of don Manuel de Vilhena, the present auspicious governor of this illustrious order.

ADVERTISEMENT.

ANNALS

OF THE

ORDER

OF

St. JOHN of JERUSALEM,

Drawn up in a fuccinct manner.

HE 23d of August, A. D. 1568, brother Peter DE Monte, or DU Mont, grand prior of Capua, was elected grand master. Peter DE His name was Guidalotti; but being great Monte. nephew by the mother's side to pope Julius III. of the house of Monte, he, for that reason, took the name and arms of that family.

Dame Hieronyma d'Olibo, grand prioress 1569. of the royal house of Sixene, of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, situated, as has been already observed, in the kingdom of Arragon, returned to her obedience, with the consent of her whole community, and put herself under the government and particular authority of the grand master, from which that house had withdrawn itself for near an hundred years, on pretence that it depended only on the holy see.

SELIMUS II. emperor of the Turks, undertakes the conquest of the isle of Cyprus, and on that account declares war against the Venetians. The progress of this war; and the taking of Nicosia and Famagusta by the insidels, gives occasion to a league

Vol. V. H between

between the pope, the king of Spain, and the Vene-

The chevaliers de St. Aubin, Roquelaure, and Ferrand de Coiro, famous cruizers, take con1570. fiderable prizes in the Egyptian fea, and in the very mouth of the Nile. But these advantages, which accrued only to the profit of some private men, do not compensate the order for the great loss it sustains, by the deseat of St. Clement. Lucchiall, a famous corsair, at the head of a strong squadron, surprites that of Malta, under the command of this knight, takes three gallies from him, and forces the admiral to run a-ground off of the tower of Monchiaro, in the isse of Sicily. This impropitious event is followed with the stal death of St. Clement.

THE battle of Lepanto between the Christians and infidels. The Turks lost 30,000 men in it: their general was killed, two of his sons were taken pritoners, togother with 5000 officers or foldiers: 20,000 Christian slaves recover their liberty: they took 140 gallies from the inidels, not to mention such as were either burnt or sunk. The Christians on their side lost 7600 men, and sourceen captains of the gallies. Though the order had sent no more than three gallies, nevertheless the knights bravely signalized themselves in this engagement.

In the same year the grand master having, with great expense, sinished the building of the new city, called the city of la Valette, the soundation of which had been laid by the grand master of that name, he transports the residence of the convent thither.

The distribution of the principal dignities of the order. Brother Francis Burges is made bailiff of Majorca: brother Francis d'Arquembourg Tourville quits the dignity of hospitaller for the grand priory of Champagne: brother Peter Pelloquin succeeds him in the post of hospitaller, after having quitted the dignity of bailiff of the Morea, which, upon his abdication, is given to brother William deMalin-le-Lux: this last resigns the post of great treasurer, which is given to brother Christopher de Montgaudri. After all these several removals,

the

the grand master and the council, upon the voluntary refignation of the commander de d'Arquembourg Tourville, at the request of Charles the ninch, bellows the grand priory of Champagne upon the chevalier de Sevre.

THE death of the grand mailer de Monte, aged

76. Brother JOHN L'EVESQUE DE LA CASSIERE, of the language of Auvergne, and marshal of the order, is elected grand mafter: and the next day after his electi- DE LA on, he is in full council acknowledged fovereign prince of the iflands of Malta and Goza.

TOHN L' EVESQUE CASSIERE

Under his administration a new promoti- 1572. on is made in the dignities of the order. 27. Jan.

The commander brother Mark de la Goutte, of the language of Auvergne, is made grand marshal of the order, which post was vacant by the election of la Cassiere to the grand mastership. The commander brother Hubert Solar is made lieutenant to the great admiral, and afterwards prior of Lombardy. Brother Justinian, general of the gallies, having completed his two years of service, is succeeded by brother Philip Flach, grand bailiff of Germany. Brother Francis Pouget is made captain of the admiral galley; and brother Pompey Soard, commander of the galley of St. Peter. Brother Francis Mego of the isle of Rhodes, after having executed the office of auditor, under the grand masters d'Omedes, la Valette, Monte, and la Cassiere, is made vice-chancellor of the order, upon the promotion of Rojas Chapelain to the bishopric of Malta. The commander Francis de Moretton Chabrillan, and Dr. Melchior Cagliares, are appointed fyndics, to examine the conduct of the judges in civil and criminal cales.

BROTHER Jerom de Guette, great conseiva-1573. tor, is fent embaffador to Rome, to take the oath of obedience to Gregory XIII. fueceflor to Pius V.

GREAT preparations are made at Malta, to 1574. oppose the grand seignior Sclimus 11. who had threatened to fall upon the island with all his forces: but he employs them another way, and takes the fort of Goletta, and the city of Tunis.

THIS year the inquisition is faid to have been set up in the ifle of Malta.

THE death of Selimus II: who fucceeded is by Amurath III. his eldeft fon.

A great dispute between the order and the republic of Venice about a ship richly laden with merchandize belonging to some Jews, which the knights seize upon as their prize.

ANOTHER dispute between several commanders of the language of Provence, about the grand priory of Toulouse. Romegas is made general of the gallies.

On occasion of the reports of an invasion which the Turks intended speedily against Malta, the grand master and council are reproached for making no provision against it (under pretence that the king of Spain was as much concerned as themselves, in the preservation of the island) and of being guilty of a neglest which might prove very prejudicial to the order.

BROTHER John George de Schonborn is by the council appointed to redress the abuses which had crept into the commandries of Germany by the mal-administration of the particular receivers.

The chevalier de Mendosa, as yet only a probationer, arrives at Malta with a brief from the pope, who orders, that as soon as he shall have made his vows, he shall take the great cross, with the title of turcopilier, annexed to the language of England This causes a general discontent in the convent, who send embassidors to the pope to engage him to revoke the brief, granted to a young man who had no experience, and who yet was going to be one of the eight piliers, or chiefs of the whole order.

THE affair of the Jews of Venice comes again upon the carpet. The senate, by way of reprisals, sequester all the estates which the order had within the territories of the republic. The grand master, on this occasion, sends an embassador to Rome, to represent to the pope, that as those Jews were not subjects of the republic, it was a constant practice, and which was moreover allowed by all laws whatever, to seize upon an enemy's robe, as counterband goods, though it be found on board a friend's ship. This affair was concluded to the satisfaction of the senate; the knights were obliged to restore the booty which they had taken from the Levantine Jews, and the senate took off the sequestration.

that

The chevalier Correa, a Portuguese, is affalsuated by fix other knights, his countrymen, who, putting on false beards, got by that means into his apartment. They are arrested, and prosecuted, and the secular judge condemns them to be sewed up in a sack, and thrown into the sea.

THE corfairs of Algiers take the galley of St. Paul, which belonged to the order.

THERE was in the house of Austria, of the German branch, a young prince, ArchdukeWenceslaus by name, who took the cross and habit as knight of Malta. The pope, at the king of Spain's request, gave him a brief, in the form of gratice expessative, a kind of bull, dated March the 10th, 1577, to qualify him to enjoy the dignity of grand cross, the priories of Castile and Leon, and the bailliage of Lora, after the death of the incumbents; which the grand master and council, in consideration of the protection the order received from the king of Spain, were obliged to pass, after the German prince had made his vows.

FRANCE, at the same time, made another invasion, in prejudice of the rights of seniority, and the privileges of the order. The council of Henry III. having issued out an order, authorizing the king to name some of his subjects to the grand priory of Auvergne, that prince wrote to the grand master to procure the three grand priories of France, St. Giles and Champagne, for Francis de Lorraine the queen's brother.

THE order had another storm breaking out upon it from Germany, where it was debated in a diet, whether it would be proper to oblige the knights of Malta, of the German language, to incorporate themselves with the Teutonic knights, and unite their commandries to that order, to render it thereby more powerful, and better able to make war upon the infidels in Hungary. But this went no farther, the proposal being buffled by the skill and dexterity of the commander Scaglia, a Piedmontese, and at that time embassador from the order to the diet.

THE grand duke of Tuscany sends the chevalier

Bongianni Giantigliazzi, with the grand ma-

Bongianni Giantigliazzi, with the grand ma1577. ster's leave, as his embassador to Constantinople. The Turkish sultan, in a private conversation which he had with him, shewing him a plan of the city of la Valette, asked the embassador is it was drawn exactly, and whether the place was as well fortisted as it appeared to be? "Sir, (replied the "knight) he who drew this plan forgot its chief for"tiscation, which consists in the courage and valour
"of above a thousand knights, who are ever ready to "fight to the last drop of their blood in defence of the "place."

TROUBLES in the order, raifed by eight Castilian knights, who complained against the grand mafter and the council, as having greatly wronged them and their whole language, in confenting to the disposition which the pope and the king of Spain had made of the priories of Castile and Leon, and the bailliage of Lora, in favour of the archduke Wenceflaus. The malecontents were instigated underhand by feveral great croffes, who fomented the fedition. The grand mafter has recourse to the pope, who cites the mutineers to appear before him; they own their fault, and the grand master, under pretence that as they had not any commandries, nor any patrimony or money of their own, it would be impossible for them to undertake fuch a journey, prevails with the pope to excuse them from coming to Rome; they were however obliged to appear before him in full council. with each of them a wax taper in his hand, in order to make him and the council fatisfaction, and to ask his pardon: which was granted them, after their having been first severely reprimanded by the grand matter.

The death of the grand prior of Bohemia. The emperors had taken upon them to nominate to it, and the order for a long time had neither enjoyed the perfonal estate of those who died, nor the mortuary, nor the profits arising from the vacancy of the priory. The grand master and council appoint the bailiff de Schomborn their embassador at the imperial court. This knight has a conference at Prague with brother Christopher de Verdemberg, who had very great interest with the emperor: and, to engage him to support the rights of the order, the bailiff delivers him an instrument and a bull from the grand master, by which he constituted him grand prior of Bohemia: which assair succeeds agreeable to the intentions and the desires of the grand master.

HENRY, king of Portugal, acquaints the grand mafter with the death of his nephew king Sebaitian, who was killed the 22d of September 1578, at the battle of Alcaçer, where feveral commanders of the order of St. John likewife lost their lives, and notifies at the same time his own accession to the throne.

BROTHERS Gargallo bishop of Malta, and 1579. Creffin prior of the church, both of them men of reftless and turbulent spirits, began to raise a storm, which broke out about this time, against the grand mafter their benefactor.

THE death of the archduke Wenceslaus, grand prior of Castile and Leon, which is followed by that of Don John of Austria, natural son to Charles V.

BROTHER Justiniani, grand prior of Messina, is named embassador to the courts of Castile and Portugal, to make the compliments of condolance upon the death of those several princes, and particularly to make fure of succours from thence, that the order might be the better enabled to oppose the Turks, who again threatened to invade Malta.

BISHOP Gargalla, renewing his incroachments on the authority of the grand malter and council, pretends to make a judicial vilitation of the hospital of the Notable-city, in which he is opposed by the administrators, as being subject to no authority but that of the grand master and council. The bishop excommunicates them: the clergy side with him, and levy contributions to support the expences of this dispute. The order appoints brother Damientaliata, a Maltese divine, of the order of St. Dominic, to defend their privileges. The magistrates of the cities present a petition to the grand master, complaining that the friends and creatures of the bishop sallied out of his palace in arms, and abused the citizens who perfifted in the obedience which they owed their fovereign. The grand master, to put a stop to this disorder, settles a guard of fitiy men in the town, now called the Victorious City.

THE grand master sends brother Hugh de Loubens de Verdalle as his embassador to the pope, to acquaint him with these disturbances, and gives him instructions to apply to his holiness for a confirmation of the privileges which his predecessors had granted to the order; and likewise to grant leave for the prior of the church to confer, in case of the bishop's resusal, the lesser orders, not excepting those of deacons, upon young candidates for the ecclesiastical profession. The pope appoints the archbishop of Palermo to take cognizance of these disputes; but that prelate, upon his arrival at Malta, finds the animosities carried to such a height, that he remits the cognizance of the affair to the holy see, and the bishop goes to Rome to defend his conduct.

A GREAT conspiracy against the life of the grand master, whom three officers of the inquisition 1580. had resolved to possion: they are arrested, and accuse several knights, some of whom were great crosses, and particularly one Petrucci, inquisitor of Malta, of being their accomplices. Some knights of the languages of Italy, Arragon, and Ca-ftile, force their way tumultuously into the council, infult the grand master, and, without any respect to his dignity, challenge him to declare what proof he had of their having conspired against his life. And altho' the vice-chancellor told them, that they had not been so much as once mentioned in the council, they yet were not satisfied, but insisted that the order should send three embassadors to the pope, who were brother Anthony de Villars, grand prior of Auvergne, brother Francis Guiral, bailist of Negrepont, and brother Anthony de Bologna, bailist of St. Stephens. But Bologna and Guiral, not caring to intermeddle in so troublessome an affair, excused themselves from the journey, on pretence of their ill state of health; which a little damped the heat and animosity of the most violent.

Stile,

THE bailiff of Brandenburg, and feveral knights of the bailliage of Sonneberg, are cited before the council of the order, for having, in opposition to their profes-fion, embraced the Lutheran religion.

THE emperor pretends he has a right to nominate to the grand priory, and the commandries of the kingdom of Bohemia.

THE council, supported by the greatest part of the convent, rebel against la Cassiere. This sedition was raised on three several accounts. The 1581.

first was because of the grand master's having forbid the knights of different languages to favour particularly the nations and princes whose subjects they were born: his reason for it was, because the Spaniards, who, since the time of Charles V. had been bred up under the formidable power of the house of Austria, were for bringing the whole order to crouch to it. The second cause was, the grand master's having iffued out a public proclamation to clear the town and city of la Valette of all loose and disorderly women, and his having forced them either to quit the island, or retire into the villages and hamlets which lay remote from the residence of the convent. The third occasion was owing to the ambition of some great crosses who aspired to the grand mastership; and who, seeing the grand grand mafter, though he was very old, nevertheless enjoyed his health very well, were afraid they should not outlive him, and therefore resolved either to depose him, or force him to abdicate, and by that means make a vacancy in his dignity.

THE languages of Castile and Portugal, some add those of Arragon and Germany, several knights of the three languages of France, with Mathurin del Efeur, called Romegas, at their head, meet in a tumultuous manner, and complain, that the grand mafter, by the several orders he issued out, plainly manifested that his understanding was in a manner gone: that he was more intent upon the conduct of the Maltele women, than upon the enterprises of the Turks and the Corfairs of Barbary; that he took no care of filling the magazines of Malta; that he was always afleep at council, and did nothing when he was awake but plague his knights: and thereupon they fend deputies to him to propose to him his naming of a lieutenant, since he himself was incapable of the administration. Upon his refusal, a full council meets at brother Cressin's, who was prior of the church, and the main ipring of this fedition, when they appoint Romegas, prior of Toulouse and Ireland, to be lieutenant of the mastership; the Spanish knights having preferred him before others of their own nation, in hopes of engaging the languages of France on their fide. Such was the result of this feditious affembly, whose aim was to suspend from his lawful authority, a grand master, who was valuable for his wisdom, his picty and valour, only to put in his stead a knight, given up a prey to ambition, brave indeed and successful in cruising, but of a savage nature, cruel to his enemies; and whose only merit was his being a formidable corfair.

BESIDES Romegas, who was in reality, though fecretly, at the head of the conspiracy, and who, in outward appearance, seemed only to be drawn in to acquiesce to the sentiments of the greatest part of the knights, there were four others who acted openly against the grand master. The first was Cressin, whom the grand mafter had made prior of the church. This wretch feemed to be the most bitter enemy his benefactor had. The feecond was the bailiff Rivalle, who, having missed of the grand mastership, when Monte carried it from him, fancied he should get it, in case la Cassiere could be deposed. The third was Ducro, a great cross; and the fourth, who was Romegas's creature and consident, was a Frenchman, the commander de Maillo-Sacquenville by name.

These four ringleaders of the fedition do not stop here; but, to carry their rebellion and outrage still further, they, at the head of their accomplices, rush into the grand master's palace; arrest him by virtue of an order of council; put him in an open chair, and carry him under a guard of soldiers, like a criminal to the castle of St. Angelo, where they kept him prisoner. All the way as he went from the city of la Valette to the castle, he was exposed to the shouts and insolence of several young knights, and of those scandalous prostitutes, who insulted and abused him with abominable language, by way of reproach; but this conduct on the contrary, before equitable judges, was real encomiums that redounded to his glory.

The rebels, in order to get their proceedings approved of by the pope, the supreme head of the order, sent him three embassadors, the chief of whom was Sacquenville, the confident of Romegas, who got him named. The grand master, notwithstanding his close confinement, found means to send four other embassadors to Rome; these were the chevaliers de Blot Viviers, Peter Roux de Beauvais, brother Don Francis de

Guzman, and brother Angelo Pellegrini.

Two days after, Chabrillan, general of the gallies, returns back into the harbour of Malta, with the knights who had been out at sea with him. He was no sooner ashore but he desired to see the grand matter, which the rebels durst not refuse him: whereupon he goes to the castle of St. Angelo, and offers the grand master to restore him to his authority, and carry him back to his palace at the head of 2000 men, made

made up either of the forces he had on board his gallies, or of the knights and the worthiest people of the island, who detested this insurrection. But the generous old man answered him, with great wisdom, that he expected to be restored by the authority of the pope, the first superior of the order; and that he had rather end his days in prison, than give occasion to his knights, whom he always considered as his children, to fight with one another upon his account.

THE embassadors of the two parties arrive at Rome: those of the mutineers, in order to bring his holiness to confent to the depoling of the grand mafter, represent him as an old man that had loft his fenses, and who was incapable of governing the order. The pope, to prevent his being imposed upon by this affertion, sends Gaspar Viscenti, auditor of the Rota, as his nuncio, to Malta, to take cognizance of the affair on the place. This prelate, upon his arrival there, calls a general affembly of all the convent, and lays before them two briefs which he had brought with him; one for the grand master, and the other for Romegas; by which both of them were enjoined to come to Rome.

THE king of France, upon receiving advice of the fhameful treatment which the grand master met with from his religious, fends him a knight to affure him that he will employ all his power to reduce the mutineers to their duty.

LA CASSIERE arrives at Rome, attended with 300 knights. He makes his entry into that capital of the Christian world as it were in triumph. The pope's court, the houses of the cardinals, several princes and embassadors, go a considerable way to meet him. holiness receives him with great marks of esteem, condoles and comforts him. Romegas follicits an audience; but the pope fends him word, that he will not so much as see him, till he has first abdicated his post of lieutenant of the mastership. Romegas is so prodigiously afflicted upon his receiving of this order, that he falls in a fwoon, and is feized with a violent fever, which carries him off in a few days. His partifans are ordered ordered to go and make their fubmissions to the grand master. The commander de Sacquenville, coming up to the grand master, and going no further than asking to kits his hand, the cardinal de Montalto cried to him. Down upon your knees, rebellious knight; had it not been for the goodness and clemency of your " worthy grand mafter, your head had been chopped off fome days ago in the piazza Navona." Every body at Malta make their fubinissions. The pope was for having the grand mafter return to Malta, there to enjoy the authority to which he was restored; but providence disposed otherways of him, and he died at Rome after three months stay in that city. His corps was carried back to Malta, and his heart deposited at Rome, in the church of St. Lewis. His holiness ordered this inscription to be put over it, which was made by the famous M. Anthony Muret.

" Fratri Joanni epilcopo, magno militiæ Hierofoly-" mitanæ magistro, viro fortissimo, religiosissimo, splen-" didiffimo, cujus, ut igne aurum, fic calumniis spectata ac probata integritas, etiam enituit, facra fodalitas " militum Hierofolymitanorum patriæ principi optimo

" mærens posuit. Vixit annos 73, obiit Romæ 12

" Kalend. Januarii 1582."

THE grand master happening to die at made all the order afraid lest the pope, as first superior, should take upon him to 1582.

name his fucceffor. This was the occafion of an embaffy, and a famous deputation, fent by the convent of Malta to Gregory XIII. to intreat him not to infringe the order's right of election. The pope ordered a fearch to be made into the registers of his predeceffors, particularly those of Boniface IX. Innocent VII. and Gregory XII. and, after coming to a refolution, dismissed the embassadors, with an affurance that he would, in a little time, fend them a brief to proceed to an election, without any further explanatien of his intentions, of which he told them fignior Vifconti his nuncio was fully instructed.

In fact. upon the 12th of January 1582, the chapter being met, and the fixteen electors chose, his holi-Vol. V. neß's ness's nuncio presented them a brief, wherein he allowed them indeed to proceed to a kind of choice, but confined them to chuse one of the three persons whom the pope had proposed, viz. Verdalle, a knight of the language of Provence, and great commander; Panisse,

HUGH DE LOU-BENX DE VER-

DALLE.

grand prior of St. Giles; and Chabrillan, bailiff of Manosque. VER-DALLE, who had been a long time embassador at Rome, and was very acceptable to the pope and all his court, found the same favourable dispositions towards him in the chapter; accordingly he was chosen, and proclaimed grand mafter; and the pope ratified his election, and fent a brief to incorporate and unite the dignity of turcopilier to the grand mastership, a dignity which had been anciently annexed to the language of England.

A GENERAL chapter is held, which lays a general tax upon all the estates of the order.

THE Venetians feize two gallies of the order, by way of reprifals, for some merchandize that had been taken in Turkish vessels, and which was claimed by Venetian merchants.

New fortifications ordered in the ifle of Goza.

THE language of Italy carries the point of precedence before that of Arragon.

THE profecution and trial of the chevalier Avogadre, general of the gallies: he is 1584. deprived of his post, condemned to a year's Jan. 9th.

imprisonment, and the revenues of his bailliage are confiscated for three years, and paid in to the treasury of the order.

THE grand duke's gallies cruize in company with those of the order.

BROTHER Claude of Lorrain, called the chevalier d'Aumale, arrives at Malta in a galley of his own.

JOHN Andrew Doria, generalissimo to the king of Spain, arrives at Malta, and has a conference with the grand master.

THE

THE pope's brief, excluding the knights, and incapacitating them for being made either bishops of Malta, or priors of the church.

DEATH of pope Gregory XIII. The election of Six-tus Quintus.

A VENETIAN ship arrested by the gallies of the order, by way of reprifals.

This year is fpent in debating the grand ma- 1585. Iter's right of nominating the general of the gallies, and the knight who was to have the particular command of the admiral galley.

An order forbidding any man's carrying pocket piftols and stillettos about him; weapons fit only for banditti and affassins.

SACONNAI, grand marshal of the order, is 1587. punished for taking a knight's servant, who had been accused of thest, out of the prison of the Castellany.

CHARLES d'Orleans is put in possession of the grand priory of France, without any reservation, and in the very same manner that Henry de Angoulême had enjoyed it.

BROTHER Michael de Sevre, grand prior of Champagne, takes a very inconfiderate step, and appeals from the decrees of the last general chapter, to the secular tribunal.

THE spirit of sedition still continues in the convent. The grand master goes to Rome. The pope, to silence the malecontents, creates him a cardinal, and sends him back to Malta.

SEVERAL prizes taken by the knights who 1583.

were out a cruifing.

The grand master makes choice of James 1539. Bosio to write the history of the order, which had been begun by the commander John Anthony Fossan.

DEATH of pope Sixtus Quintus, who is suc- 1590.

ceeded by Gregory XIV.

THE Jews and their effects are, by a particular brief of the pope, declared to be lawful prize. 1595.

THE plague makes dreadful havock in the ifland of Malta. The Jesuits are brought in by bishop Gargallo, and settle there.

THE commander John Otho Bosio is made 1593. vice-chancellor.

THE pope grants the priory of Barletto, vacant by the death of cardinal Scipio of Gonzaga, to prince Ferdinand of Gonzaga, afterwards cardinal, and, at last, duke of Mantua.

THE grand priory of Venice, after having been postessed by cardinal Farnese, devolves to cardinal Colonna.

HENRY IV. after the death of Henry III. and during the time of the civil wars, disposes of the grand priory of Aquitain in favour of the commander de Chattes; and of that of Auvergne in favour of the baron de Bellegarde, though he was a layman.

THE dignity of cardinal, which the pope had conferred on the grand master, is not sufficient to put a stop to the restless and sedicious humour of the malecontents: so that this prince, sired out with their continual murmurs and complaints, makes another voyage to Rome, and dies of grief.

BROTHER don MARTIN GARZEZ, of the language of Arragon, is chosen grand MARTIN master. He had no favourites, no partia-GARZEZ. lity, and his government was agreeable both to the knights and the people.

Pope Clement VIII. confers the priory of Pifa upon don Antonio de Medicis.

THE Turks ravage Hungary; and the council of the order, to encourage the succouring of that 1507. nation, declares, by a solemn edict, that any knights who should serve in that country against the insidels, the order will reckon that service an equivalent to their residence, and that they shall be intitled to the same privileges as if they had resided in the convent, or had served on board the vessels of the order.

THE

THE emperor of Rodolph II. issues out a diploma, which terminates the affair of Bohemia to the satisfaction of the order.

New troubles at Malta, occasioned by the proceedings of the inquisiors, whose successions.

fors carry them to a Itill greater height.

The grand mafter and the council make a decree in factor of the Swis, allowing their children to be received into the priory of Germany, provided their children are born in lawful wedlock of father and mother, grandfather and grandmother, great grandfather and great grandmother, all Roman catholics, and statutably qualified, who had never been mechanics, but defeended from officers captains, and commanders, whose profession of arms was to be considered on the footing of nobility.

THE century ends with the fortifications which the grand mafter and the council make in the callle and ille of Goza.

The bailliage of Armenia suppressed. Great 1600. disputes between the languages of Italy and Germany, both of them claiming the priory of Hungary.

THE inquisitors, to make their court to the pope, are continually making incroachments on the authority of the grand master and council, and make themselves odious and insupportable to the knights.

DEATH of the grand master don Martin de Garzez.
Brother ALOF DE VIGNACOUR, grand hospitaller of France, is chosen to succeed him. This knight, who was of the language of France, and of a very antient family of the province of Picardy, was great cour.

merit raifed him to the dignity of grand master: and there has hardly ever been a mastership more famous than his; whether we consider its duration, which was upwards of twenty years, or the various events that happened in the order during his administration.

I3 THE

The grand master dispatched several embassiadors to notify his election to the principal sovereigns of Christendom. The commander Rodrigo Britto was sent to the pope; brother Nicholas Dellamara to the emperor; brother William de Meaux Bois Boudran was employed in the same quality at the court of the king of France; and don Bernard de Zuniga at that of his catholic majesty.

THE inquisitor Veralli is for taking cognizance of the affairs of the government; in which he is openly countenanced by pope Clement VIII.

THE gallies of the order seize upon the town of Mahometa, on the coast of Barbary; an enterprize formed with great prudence, and exequited with as much valour.

EMERY de Chattes made embassador of the order to king Henry IV.

ENTERPRIZE of the knights upon the towns of Lepanto and Patras.

1603. A GENERAL chapter held.

THE gallies of the order ravage the ifle of Lango, formerly fo dear to the knights, during their refidence at Rhodes; but now their fucceffors carry off 165 flaves, out of hatred to the Turks.

1605. DEATH of pope Clement VIII.

PAUL V. his successor, gives three commandries of the language of Italy to one of his nephews, 1606. though they did not happen to fall vacant in the court of Rome: and a little while afterwards, he likeways conferred the commandry of Benevento upon cardinal Buffaio.

Project of a knight, a Dalmatian by birth, but of the language of Germany, proposed to the 1607. order, for getting the Poles to restore the great commandry of Poina, which was fallen into secular hands, upon condition of establishing a body of knights in that kingdom, to serve on horseback against the Turks; which did not succeed, by reason of the obstacles

obstacles put in the way by a prince of the house of Radzivil, whose ancestors or relations had probably got possession of it.

TROUBLES at Malta in the inn and language of Germany, on account of an attempt which had been made to get Charles count of Brie, 1608. natural fon to Henry duke of Lorrain, admitted into that language; the affair is carried to such an height, that the Germans tear down the arms of the grand master and the order from off the gate of their inn, and leave only those of the emperor.

FRANCIS de Lorrain, called the chevalier de Gurse, makes his first campaign on board 1609.

the gallies of Malta.

THE chevaliers Fresenet, Maurot, and Gaucott, surprise the fortress of Lajazzo in the gulf of that name, make their way into it by means of a petard, which blew up the gate; take a great booty, and, after blowing up the fortifications of the place, carry off above 300 slaves.

A YEAR fatal to France and the order of Malta, by the affaffination of Henry the great.

CORINTH taken and facked by the gallies of the order.

THE prince of Vendoline made general of the gallies of the order.

THE grand master upon receiving advice that the corfairs of Barbary designed to make an attempt upon the isle of Goza, sends troops, 1613.

ammunition, and provisions thither.

A New alarm in the language of Italy, by the pope's granting the duke of Modena's fon the gratiæ expectativæ, a kind of bull, upon the 1614. commandry of Reggio: a favour of a dangerous nature from the ill consequences that might enfue.

SIXTY Turkish gallies appear off of the isle 1615, of Malta, and land 5000 men, but are able to make make no flaves from the care the inhabitants take to retire into the ftrong holds.

The grand master makes an aqueduct to carry a fine large spring from the city of Malta commonly 1616. called the Notable city, to the city of Valette, and the piazza before the grand mafter's palace: a work worthy of the Roman grandeur.

THE duke of Nevers is for founding a new order. or, properly speaking, for separating the old one of St. Sepulchre from the o der of St. John of Jerusalem. Brother don Lewis Mendez de Vasconcellos, bailist of Acre, a very able negotiator, is dispatched to the court of France, to traverse the duke's designs. He arrives in France with the quality of embassador extraordinary. and went to his first audience attended by the commander de Silery embassador in ordinary, brother de St. Leger, receiver of the priory of France, the commander de Formigeres captain of the life-guards, the commander de Girlande, and all the knights who were then at Paris, and about the court. He presented his letter to the king, who gave as favourable an anfiver to it as could be withed, and the dake of Nevers's project came to nothing.

FACARDIN, prince of the Druß, comes to Malta, to implore the protection and faccour of the order against the grand feignior's perfecutions.

Bosio, who was only an honorary knight, pretending to dispute precedence with a knight 1617. who was his senior, was made sensible that his seniority could not be reckoned but from the ay of his rehabilitation, and that an honorary knight could never be advanced to the dignities of the or-

1618. The treasury of the order cause a gallion to be built in the port of Amsterdam, which cofts 60,000 crowns of gold.

der.

New fortifications raised in the roads of St. Paul, of Maria-Sirocco, and Marsa Scale, and in the little isle of Comino, situated between Malta and Goza.

CAGLIARES,

CAGLIARES, bishop of Malta, makes several incroachments on the authority of the grand master and council: he goes to Rome to support 1619, them, and leaves behind him a vicar-general as pragmatical as himself. The young knights of all the languages, unable to endure the audacioutness of that turbulent fellow, run to look for him in his house, in order to throw him into the sea. The grand master obliges him to surrender himself, and fends him to Rome to answer the prosecution against him. The pope is incensed at this affair, orders his inquisitor to examine into it, and threatens to excommunicate the grand master and council, whose submission at last puts an end to the affair.

THE army of the catholic league make an unfuccessful attempt in order to seize upon the town of Susa on the coast of Barbary. A considerable number of knights had a share in this expedition, among whom are reckoned brother Anthony Barras, brother Francis Juxs, brother de la Meufana, brother Merault de Pelons, brother Melchior de Gozon-Melac, brother Anthony an honorary knight, captain of foot in the fervice of the king of Spain: and among the wounded were brother Alphonio Castel St. Pierre, captain of the admiral galley of the order, brother Anthony Mastrillo, captain of the patroness, brother John de Saligy, a native of Auvergne, brother Cefar de St. Perver, of the language of France, who died at Malta of his wounds, brother Azeredoa Castilian, and brother Luys Mendez Vasconcellos, a Portuguese.

FRANCIS Ottoman, a dominican friar, who pretended to be fon to the grand feignior Achmet, comes to Malta and is received there upon the recommendation of cardinal Verally, prefident of the congregation of the Catechumens.

ENTERPRISE of the gallies of the order upon Castel-Tornez. The commander brother Alphonso Castel St. Pierre is named by the general of the gallies to head that enteprise. They clap three petards to the gate, and break into the palace; which was a kind of magazine to all the Morea. The general of the gallies has notice given him by a Greek, that in case he does not retire immediately, his retreat will be intercepted by 4000 Turks who were hard by. He orders a retreat to be sounded, and St. Pierre, who received the same advice, forms a squadron, and makes his way to the sea with the booty and the prisoners he had taken.

DEATH of Paul V, who is succeeded by Gregory XV. This pope issue out bulls to confirm all the privileges which his predecessors had granted to the order.

came fo.

New complaints of the language of Italy, on account of being deprived of their right of succeeding to 22. to the vacant commandries, by the popes nomination to them oftentimes before they be-

THE commander de Chatte Gessan is sent to Malta by king Lewis XIII. to desire the order to join their gallies to his, in order to fight against the Hugonots.

THE chevalier de Caffelani de Montemedan is by the council ordered to go with the gallies to Marseilles, and to carry thither the great gallion which had been built at Amsterdam.

THE grand master deVignacour being a hunting, and pursuing a hare in all the heat of the month of August, was seized with a fit of an apoplexy, just as had happened fifty years before to the grand master de la Valette. They carried him to the new city, where he appointed brother Nicholas la Mara, great admiral of the order, to be his lieutenant. He afterwards received the sacraments of the church with great devotion, disposed of his effects as usual, and died on the 14th of September, being 75 years old.

THE chapter met to chuse him a successor. There were two pretenders, viz. Luys Mendez de Vasconcellos a portuguese, bailist of Acre, who had been embassador from the order to the courts of Rome and France,

MENDEZ and Anthony de Paule, of the language of Provence, grand prior of St. Giles. Brother don Luys Mendez had the preference, and was accordingly proclaimed grand master on the 17th of September; but he hardly enjoyed his dignity fix months; and the little time that he outlived Vignacour, was employed in confirming the wise regulations he had made. The grand master being near fourscore years of age, died on the fixth of March 1623.

master

THE 10th of the same month, they proceeded to the election of a new grand master, and the choice of the convent fell upon brother Anthony de

Paule, prior of St. Giles, being feventy one years old. The commander de DE PAULE.

Tormegeres embassador of the order in France, dying about this time, the commander Durand de Villegagnon, was put a second time into that post, to notify the election of the new grand master to Lewis XIII.

DEATH of pope Gregory XV. who is succeeded by Urban VIII. This pope gets Anthony Barberini, his great nephew, to be received into the order as a chevalier de Justice, with a dispensation for keeping his residence, and serving in the gallies of the order.

JOHN de l'onieca, a Portuguese novice, or probationer, has his head cut off in the great piazza of the palace, after having been found guilty of robbery and murder.

BROTHER Faulcon, prior of Capua, being convicted of embezzelling 15000 ducats of the revenue received from Naples, 2000 crowns of 1624: that of Rome, and 15000 ducats more of what the grand master Lewis Mendez left behind him, is condemned to perpetual imprisonment, and dies in prison.

THE grand master does not want enemies among a set of men, who are impudent enough to fancy they can out-face truth, and make the blackest fassehoods pass for matters of fact. They present a memorial to the pope, wherein they take notice that the grand master is a man of loose life and conversation; that he is guilty of simony, and had bought his dignity with money. De Paule sent the commander brother Denis

Polastron

Polastron de la Hilliere to Rome; who, heing a man of the greatest probity and virtue, justified him in the most honourable manner from all these calumnies. The grand master had hardly got rid of this affair, when he had another upon his hands, which was full as troublesome, because pope Urban VIII. was both judge and party in it. His holiness took upon him to dispose of the commandries of the language of Italy. He had before given the two commandries of Milan and Bufalora, to don Antonio Barberini his nephew, and he afterwards gave that of Ascoli to the chevalier Machiavelli; that of Volterra to the chevalier brother Donat Rustici; the right of seniority to the commander brother Hubert Ricafoli, and the commandry of Monopoli to the chevalier brother Alexander Zambec-These new concessions, added to those of the popes Paul V. and Gregory XV. which were computed to amount to no less than 17 commandries, put all the language of Italy in a flame. The knights refused to make their campaigns, or to serve on board the ships or gallies of the order; and nost of them retired to their own houses and relations. The grand master, to remedy this diforder, called a council, when it was, agreed, that they should fend an embassador to the pope, to lay before him the just complaints of the or-They likewise sent three others on the same account, to the principal fovereigns of Christendom, Brother James du Liege-Charault, grand hospitaller, was ordered to Rome; brother John Conrard de Rofbach, bailiff of Brandenburgh, was fent to the emperor; la Marra, prior of Mellina, and general of the gallies, to the king of France; and brother don John Ximenes, prior of Navarre, to the king of Spain. These embassadors were likewise directed to lay before those princes, an account of the abuse of certain dispensations which were granted to the knights at Rome. by which they were allowed to dispose of their effects. whereby the common treasury was defrauded of its right, and which could end no otherwise than in the ruin of the order. We shall take notice of the iffue of this embassy to Rome under the year 1626.

the

THE order makes an attempt upon the island of Santa Maura, in possession of the Turks, which miscarries: twelve knights were killed in it, besides a great number who were wounded.

A GREAT fea-engagement, in which the order loses two gallies, the St. John and the St. Francis: several knights were killed in it, others wounded, and some made flaves.

To these misfortunes must be added another; for the pope, notwithstanding the remonstrances of the grand master, and the council, continues 1626. to bestow the Italian commandries on his relations.

THE order had hitherto never kept up above 1627. five gallies, but the grand master now causes a fixth to be built.

URBAN, who was no friend to the order, not fatisfied with plundering it of its principal commandries in Italy, which he bestowed upon his 1623. relations, now publishes an ordinance, motu proprio, changing the method that had been always hitherto observed in the election of the grand massers.

BROTHER Achilles d'Estampes Valençai 1629. is made a great cross de grace (or by favour) upon the recommendation of Lewis XIII. king of France.

ANTONIO Bosio, who was natural fon to the bailiff brother John Otho, and adopted by his uncle James Bosio, made a great progress in polite literature, and especially in the knowledge of ecclessifical history; so that his prosound capacity, threw as it were a shade over the meanness of his extraction, as may be seen by his several works; particularly that of Roma subterranea. He succeeds his adoptive father in the post of agent to the order at Rome; and being the last Vol. V.

person left of his name, he succeeds this year to all the estate and effects of the family.

THE pope, still intent upon reducing the government of the order, agreeable to his fecret views, is for changing the old usage that had been observed in general chapters.

Some Christian slaves, who composed the crew of a Turkish galley, commanded by Manni-Bei of Famagusta in the isle of Cyprus, rebel against him, take up arms, and either kill the captain and the foldiers of the galley, or force them to leap over-board, make themselves masters of the galley, and arrive safe at Malta.

A GENERAL chapter appointed on the 11th of May. The pope confents that they should retain the old usage in it of fixteen commissaries, two for every language: but he insists, that the inquisitor shall preside over them, and have a power of delegating, in case of absence, any body whom he shall think fit in his place; that he shall likewise have a power of suspending the chapter, as well as of proroguing. The grand mafter affuresthe pope, that he is disposed to obey him, but that the body of the order could not bear with patience his holiness's introducing a person into the government who did not belong to the order, with the title and authority of prefident. The pope having no manner of regard to these remonstrances, the council thought fit to fubmit. But, in order to avoid the fire and violence of the young knights, they fend them to fea a cruifing whilst the general chapter is held.

On funday the 11th of May 1631, this general chapter is opened, in which prefided the most serene lord Francis Anthony de Paule, grand master.

THE most reverend Imbroll, prior of the church.

Conventual bailiffs.

Claude Durré Ventarob, Francis Cremeaux, Tussin de Ternez Boistrigault, Philip de Gaetan, Lewis de Moncada, commander. confervator.

grand

Grand priors.

Juste du Fay Gerlande, George de Castellane d'Aluis, Antonio Maria de Ciaia, Nicolas Cavaretta,
Nicolas de la Marra,
Philip Bardaxi,

Auvergnc.
Toulouse.
Lombardy
Venice.
Messina.
Emposta.

Capitulary bailiffs.

Signorin Gattenara, bailiff or prior of the bailliage of St. Euphemia. Francis Sans, bailiff of Negrepont. Cefar Feretti, bailiff or prior of St. Stephens. Alexander Bensi, bailist or prior of St. Trinity of Venusia. Antonio Bracaccio, bailiff or prior of St. John near the sea of Naples. Majorca. Humphrey de l'Hospital, Francis Puget Cheffuel, Manolque. Juste de Brun Laliege, Brandenburg. De Rosbach, John de Bernoi Villeneuve, Laurence de Figueroa, St. Sepulchre.

Lieutenants of the conventual bailiffs.

Matthias James Phirt, lieutenant of the bailiff of Germany.

Thomas Hozis, lieutenant of the great chancellor.

BROTHE

Lucius Grimaldi, Lewis of Britto Mascarnay, James Christopher Abandlau, Alexander Orfi,

&c.

Proxies of the priors.

Biagio Brandoa, proxy of the most serene Ferdinand cardinal Infant, administrator of the priory of Portugal.

Francis Buonaroti, proxy of the most illustrious don John Charles de Medicis, prior of Pisa.

Anthony Scalamonte, proxy of the illustrious brother Aldobrandino Aldobrandini, prior of Rome.

Triftan de Villeneuve, proxy of brother James de Mauleon la Buftide, prior of St. Gilles.

Robert de Viole Soulere, proxy of brother William de Meaux Baudran, prior of France. Charles de Vajure, proxy of brother Peter de Beaujeu, prior of Champagne.

Julio Amali, proxy of brother Peter Vintimiglia, prior of Capua.

Martin de Redin, prior of Navarre, by appearing in person, suspended the powers of brother Ginesio Ruiz his proxy.

Policarpe de Casteloi, proxy of brother Peter

George Pridorfila, prior of Catalonia.

Lewis Melzi, proxy of brother Frederic Huntd, prior of Ireland.

Anthony Pontremoli, chaplain of the language of Provence, proxy of brother Arteman, prior of Hungary.

Eberard, baron d'Estain, proxy of brother Theodore Rolman, prior of Denmark.

Don John de Zuniga, proxy of don Bernardin de Zuniga, prior of Castile and Leon.

Proxies of the capitular bailiffs.

John Baptiste Calderari, proxy of the eminent cardinal Cornaro, great commander of Cyprus.

Baldaffar

Baldaffar de Marzilla, proxy of brother Lapert de Arbiza bailiff of Caspe.

Francis de Godoi, proxy of brother don Diego

de Guzman bailiff of Lora.

Joachim de Challemailon, proxy of brother James de Chenu de Bellai, bailiff of Armenia. Gabriel Dorin de Ligny, lientenant and proxy of brother James du Liege-Charault, treasurer-general.

Don Lewis de Cardenas, proxy of the illustrious bailiff brother Caraffa.

Gaspard de Maisonseule, proxy of the bailiff brother Achilles d'Estampes Valençay.

Proxies of the languages.

Francis Bagarris. Provence, Charles de Fay Gerlande. Auvergne, Alexander de Grimonval. France. Octavio Ceoli. Italy, Arragon, Ca-Gerome Bardaxi. talonia and Navarre. John James de Welthause. Germany, Castile and Gabriel d'Angulo. Portugal,

The order being suppressed in England, no proxies were named for that language.

Proxies of the commanders of the priories.

the priory of St. Henry de Latis-Entragues. Giles, Francis de Crottes de la Menardie. Peter Lewis Chantellot la Chese. Peter de Carvel de Merai. K 3 Champagne,

History of the Knights of MALTA.

Champagne, [Joachim de Sennevoi. Curtius Bombino. Rome. Lombardy, Alphonso Castel de St. Pierre. Fiorin Borfo. Venice. Pisa, Ugolin Grisoni. Gerolamo Zato. Barletto, Philip Moleti. Messina. Alphonso Dura. Capua, the castellany) Peter Marzella. of Emposta, Melchior Dureta Catalonia, Francis Torreblanca. Navarre, John de Repach. Germany, Castile & Leon, Alphonso de Angulo.

Companions of the grand master.

the language of Provence, Brother Girolamo de Merle Beauchamps, cavalcadour of the grand mafter, and brother Peter de Bernana Hornolach.

Auvergne, ther Foucaud de St. Hilare.

Adrian deContremoulins, and brother Francis de la Grange.

John Minutolo, and brother Mario Alliata.

{ N. N.

Arragon,Ca-

talonia, and Navarre,

England,

Germany,

Castile and)

Portugal, 5

John Baptist Macedonio, and brother Stephen del Portico. Wiliam Henry de Wasperg. Gondisalvo de Albernoz, and brother don Bernardin de Norogua.

Baldaffar d'Alben, and bro-

THE

The inquisitor then presented a brief from the pope, by which he was named to preside at the election of the fixteen commissaries appointed to regulate the affairs of the order, but not to have any vote there, to meddle in proposing any matter, or to speak his sentiments in any debate. The grand master, either out of prudence or policy, suffered the chapter to accept this brief, and then they proceeded to the choice of the commissaries. There were two for each language.

Villanova bailiff of Aquila. Provence, and brother Francis Crotte la Menardie. Gerlande, prior of Auvergne, and la Liegue, prior of Auvergne, Lions. Boisrigault, grand hospitaller, and brother Gabriel France. La Marra, prior of Messina, and Gatting Italy, St. Euphemia. Sans, bailiff of Negrepont, Aragon, Catalonia, and L'hopital, bailiff of and Navarre, Majorca. Serissori, the inquisitor, named, by the pope's orders, brother PeterLewisChantelot la Chese, of the lan-England, guage of Auvergne, and brother don Juan de Villaroel, of the priory of Castile. The bailiff brother James ChristopherAbandlau, and Germany, brother Evrard baron de Estain. Brother Thomas Hozes, lieu-Castile and Portutenant of the great chancellor, and brother Biagal. gio Brandao. THE

For

THE chapter having configned over all its authority to these fixteen commissaries, they, together with the inquisitor, retired into the conclave, which was held in the hall of the palace of the tower. The inquisitor, as has been already observed, presided in it according to the pope's intentions, but had no vote or authority to make any motion. Boisrigault, the grand hospitaller, as being the oldest of the fixteen, proposed the affairs on which they were to deliberate. Imbroll, prior of the church, in quality of the grand master's proxy, Abela the vice-chancellor, and brother Peter Turamini, secretary to the treasury, interveened in this assembly, in which very prudent regulations were made for determining the general and particular affairs that came before them. There has been no chapter held fince this time, and therefore the judgments given, and the regulations made in this, serve at this day for a law, and are the rule for deciding of any disputes that may arise in the order.

THE order loses the galley of St. John, which is wrecked by a storm on the coast of Calabria.

1632. The crew fave themselves on shore, and they afterwards get out the artillery and the principal effects.

This year the inhabitants of the isles of Malta and Goza were numbered, who amounted to 51750, including men, women and children, and exclusive of the knights of the order, the clergy, and those who were called at Malta, the Familiares of the inquisition.

BROTHER Imbroll, prior of the church, offers the order to write an history, when leave is given him to search into the registers of the chancery. The year following cardinal Barberini recommended another to the order for the same purpose, viz. the chevalier brother Cesar Mugalotti, who was admirably well qualified for it, and a person of great learning. Both of them began their work, but left it impersect.

The gallies of the order fail out, towards the end of April, a privateering, under the command of general Valdi, and take, near the ifle of Zante, four ships or vessels

veffels, with 650 moors or negroes on board, which they were fending from Barbary to Constantinople. The same general has another engagement with the corfairs of Tripoli, makes 338 of them flaves, and delivers 60 Christians. The Venetians make heavy complaints that the gallies of the order take prizes in the feas, and upon the demelnes of the republic. The Maltese embassador, by the grand master's order, anfivers them, that the order would be willing enough to deliver back the grand feignior's subjects who had been taken in the gulph, but that as for the corfairs, they should be fold as villains and enemies to all religions and all nations. Another fquabble with the republic of Lucca, which is followed with a decree against receiving any of that state as chevaliers de justice: the pope makes up the dispute.

ADVENTURES of prince Guchia, who pretended to be fon to Mahomet III. and whom his mother, who was of the house of Comneni, and a Christian by birth, had fent to be educated among the Christians.

order espouses this real or pretended prince.

THE Schismatical Greek Christians of the east bribe the Turks, and turn the European Franciscans out of the keeping of the holy sepulchre, Calvary, Bethlehem, and other facred places of Palestine. The pope defires the grand master and council, as better acquainted with the disposition of the Ottoman court, to take measures for restoring the Latin friars to the guardianship of the holy places. The grand mafter and his council are of opinion, that they should try what force could do, and not spare the schismatical Greeks whenever they fell into the hands of any catholic princes.

THE pope's too great uneafiness in granting the great cross to such as were no more than private knights, makes the order resolve te oppose the brief which he had granted to the chevalier de Souvré, though his father had been governor to king Lewis XIII.

DEATH of the grand master de Paule, in the 58th year of his age, after a fickness of near three months: his epitaph contains his encomium and his character.

1636. June 10th.

" Fratri

"Fratri Antonio de Paula, magno militiæ hierofolymitanæ magistro, principi gratissimo, splendidissimo, qui, ob egregias animi dotes, vivens in omnibus sui amorem, extinctus desiderium excitavit; pacem mirisice coluit & affluentiam; ordinis vires, opes addidit, auxit: ampliori munire vallo urbem aggressus cum annum ageret magisterii decimum quartum, atatis supra octogesimum (quintum) diuturno cum morbo constanter conssictus, semper se ipso major pissimè ac religiosissimè quievit in Domino, septimo

" id. Junii, anno Sal. 1636."
The 13th of June 1636, brother Paul Lascaris Ca-stelard, bailiff of Manosque, descend-

Paul Lascaris Castelard.

ed from the courts of Vintimiglia, and the antient emperors of Constantinople, was chose successfor to

Anthony de Paul. The next day the council, according to the usual custom, declared the new grand master sovereign of the isles of Malta and Goza, with all the rights his predecessors had enjoyed.

MALTA fuffers much from the dearness of corn. The grand master applies to the president of Sicily, who is hard-hearted enough to refuse the suffering of any to be exported out of the island. Nari, general of the gallies, addresses himself to the vice-roy of Naples, who allows him to take up 6000 loads, and carry them away, free of all manner of custom, and duty of exportation.

LASCARIS has a quantity of new species coined, in order to pay the workmen who were continually employed in raising new fortifications, under the direction of Florian an engineer, colonel of a regiment of foot, whom the grand master honoured with the cross and habit of the order.

BROTHER don Peter de Vintimiglia, of the same family with the grand master, makes a foundation for ever of the timber of a galley, bearing the name of St. Peter, and, for the security of it, settles two houses, of a thousand crowns a year, which he had upon the mole of Messina. Cavaretta, prior of Venice, makes

the

PAUL LASCARIS CASTERLAND Grand Master. 119

the like foundation for another galley, which was to be called the St. Nicholas; and the commander Conrard Scheifurt de Merode founds the commandry of Bre-flaw in the language of Germany.

THE grand mafter divides all the inhabitants of Malta into companies, to whom they give arms: fome knights are fet over them to inftruct them how to make use of them to oppose the inroads and descents of the Turks and cortains.

THE duke of Montalta, viceroy of Sicily, the prefident, and the rest of the king of Spain's officers, are still exasperated against the order, 1637. and not only prohibit the exportation of corn, but give orders for arresting all the Maltese ships that should put into the ports of the island. The occasion of their uneafinels was, that as the two crowns of France and Spain were at war, some French knights, who were on board either ships or gallies of France, had taken confiderable prizes at the entrance of the harbour of Malta. Upon these orders of the regency, two gallies of the order putting into the port of Syracuse, they were going to seize them : but the commodore being aware of their defign, put off immediately, and went out of the harbour. The governor, or the commanding officer, fired all the cannon of the castle upon him, to oblige him to come back; but he, in fpite of his artillery, got out to sea, and returned to Malta. This behaviour of the Spaniards, who had continual proofs of the services which the knights did their prince for the defence of his dominions, offended all Europe; and it was faid, particularly in the courts of Italy, that the gallies of Malta had never been cannonaded before, but by the corfairs and infidels. The duke of Montalto, fearing left these reports should reach his master's ear, or that the grand master should complain to him, as he had just reason to do, thought fit to dislown the conduct of the governor of Syracuse, and to condemn his proceedings, and, to give a more sub-Stantial latisfaction for what had been done, promised to allow the exportation of corn to Malta.

THE

THE commander de Talembach, of the language of Germany, offers the order to fit out a galley at his own expence: the proposal was very agreeable to the council, but the war spreading more and more in Germany, Talembach's proposal came to nothing.

THE commandry of Sarrasine is founded in Sicily, and the founder complimented with the privilege of wearing the habit of the order, and enjoying the profits of his commandry during his life.

Some French knights lie, with a naval force, in the channel of Malta, and take feveral prizes from the Spaniards, during the war 1638. between the two crowns. Captain Paul, a ferving brother, and a Frenchman horn, takes an Algerine vessel in the same place, carries it into Malta, and is well received there. But the grand master forbids him and all the knights to fight against any Christian prince, and writes about it to the king of France in very strong terms, representing to him, that some knights on board his gallies had just taken some Sicilian ships, which had interrupted the necessary commerce between the isles of Sicily and Malta, and had exasperated the king of Spain's ministers. who gave out that all this was done in concert with the council of the order.

THE commander de Charolt, general of the gallies, goes a cruifing, takes several little vessels at first, and lights upon three large ships of I ripoli, that served for a convoy to a great number of other vessels. The Maltese general, without amusing himself with cannonading them, prepares to lay them on board, and divides his gallies. The admiral galley, and the St. Peter, under the command of the chevalier John Jerome de Gallean Chateauneuf, fell upon the commodore galley of the infidels. The St. Nicholas and the Victoria, commanded by brother John Baptiste Caracciolo and brother John Brandao, attack the admiral. The St. Ubaldesque and St. Anthony, commanded by brother Bartholomew Galiley, and brother Francis Talhult, set upon the vice-admiral. The engagement was bloody, and the infidels made a brave defence.

Four

Four hundred and fifty Turkish foldiers were on board this little fleet, which was commanded by Ibrahim Rais, called la Becasse, a renegado of Marseilles, who, for a long time, had served in quality of a pilot on board the gallies of the order, and whose wife and children were still at Malta.

But he having been taken by the corfairs of Tripoli had turned Mahometan, had served on board the infidel fleets, and, by his valour and capacity, raifed himfelf to the post of admiral. Chateauneuf, who commanded the St. Peter, laid him aboard, and Marcel de Chateauneuf, the captain's brother, is the first who enters his ship, at the head of a good number of knights; he cuts the Turkish soldiers to pieces, seizes la Becasse, drags and carries him to Galean de Chateauneuf his brother, under whom he had formerly served as a pilot. The other commanders had as good fuccefs; fo that all the little fleet was taken, and not fo much as a fingle vessel escaped. They made 312 slaves, and the general of the gallies returns victorious into the harbour of Malta with twenty ships and vessels laden with a rich booty. The order lost several very brave knights in this engagement, and, among others, brother Denis of Viontessancourt, brother Bernard Perrot of Malmaifon, brother David Sanbolin, a novice, and brother Nicholas of Biencourt, a ferving brother, all of the language of France; brother Francis Isnard, brother Piolomini, and brother Philibert Gattinara, of the language of Italy; brother Alonfo Garzez of Marcilli, an Arragonian novice; and brother Gaspard of Sousa, a Portuguese. A much greater number of knights were wounded, they never failing to expose themselves without the least reserve on such occasions.

Balagu, bishop of Malta, to make his clergy more numerous, gave the tonsure, and the four lesser orders, to all such young fellows in Malta as presented themselves for that purpose. These new ecclesiatics thought their tonsure was sufficient to dispense them from appearing in the companies in which they were enlisted, from mounting the guard in their turns, and from performing the other military functions to which the grand mafter had obliged the inhabitants. The king of Spain and pope Urban VIII. blame the bishop's conduct, and condemn the pretended ecclesiastics to the tonsitre, and to wear the habit of their order, and to serve in the church agreeable to that function as there might be occasion for them, and ordered that all such of them as should be taken without their clerical habits, should be obliged to mount guard in the same manner as the other lay-inhabitants.

Vol. V. L frem

Pore Urban VIII. who had no affection for the order, but, on the contrary, refolved to subvert the government of it, grants leave, without the privity of the grand master, to the old commanders to make their wills, and dispose of their effects. A step calculated for the utter ruin of the treasury of the order, which, by this permission, is deprived of their personal estates.

SIXTEEN Algerine gallies join together to make a descent in the Marca d'Ancona, and plunder the rich treasure of our lady of Loretto.

CAPELLO, admiral of the Venetian fleet, 'meets and pursues them; they sly into the port of la Valone, belonging to the grand leignior, where the Venetian admiral burns them without respect to their asylum. This raises the grand seignior's resentment, who threatens to fall upon them; but he is at last pacified with a a sum of money.

Some knights, who were just come to be their own masters, mask themselves in carnival time, in 1639. The habit of Jesuits. The fathers complain of it to the grand master, who orders some of the young men to be arrested, but their comrades break open the prison-doors, and set them at liberty. Upon this they all go in a body to the college, throw the furniture through the windows, and force the grand master to consent to their being sent out of the island. Eleven Jesuits were put on board, four only staid behind, who had hid themselves in the city of la Valette. The council and the great crosses did not discover any great concern at the banishment of these fathers, who, in opposition to their interest, had taken upon themfelves to govern the grand masters.

PAUL LASCARIS CASTELARD Grand Mafter. 123

THE foundation of two commandries; that of Nardo by Lewis Anthony de Maffa, for the language of Italy; and that of Nice, by the grand mafter, for the language of Provence.

THE prince of Heffe d'Armstat, general of the gallies, takes six vessels of the corsairs in 1640.

the port of Goletta.

A YEAR fatal to the order by continuation of the wars between the Christian princes. The treasury had not received so much as a single crown from Germany for twenty years together. Most of the French and Italian commandries were ruined; the exchange ran very high amongst them; so that a crown, which was worth 13 or 14 tarins, would hardly produce eleven upon exchange, which obliged the grand master and council to take up 100,000 ducats of the bank of Genoa at interest, in order to carry on the fortifications of the island.

NEW disputes with the Venetians, who, 1641.

as usual, sequestrate the estates of the order.

ULADISLAUS IV. king of Poland, writes to the grand mafter, and pretends that the commandries of Bohemia ought to be common to the Polish knights as well as to those of Bohemia, fince both priories were of the same language.

WAR of the Barberini against the duke of 1642.

Parma, in which they, under pretence of his debts, wanted to feize upon the dukedom of Castro.

UREAN VIII. finding that several Italian princes had entered into a league to prevent his seizing on the dominions of the duke of Parma, requires the grand master to send him the gallies of the order. His commands are immediately obeyed; but the allies seize, in revenge, upon all the estates of the order within their territories, and cannot be prevailed upon to take off the sequestration till the order shews them, that notwithstanding they had been forced to comply with the orders of the pope, their first superior, nevertheless the commanders of the gallies had private orders to be only on the defensive, agreeable to their institution, which obliged them to offer no insult to any Christian prince, and which they had always observed.

L 2 forced

A MEMORABLE action of general Boisbaudran, who exposes himself to be surrounded by eight cor-

1644. fair gallies, rather than abandon one belonging to the order, which, by reason of the weakness of its crew, was not in a condition to keep up with him.

The feason being still favourable for keeping out at sea, the grand master sent the gallies again a cruising. On the 28th of September, the knights discovered, about 70 miles from Rhodes, a ship to the leeward, not above four miles from them. The commodore being nearest immediately gave her chace: the St. John and St. Joseph son came up with her, and, seeing her prepare for a vigorous defence, and that she made a furious fire with her great and small shot, the knights grapple with her, board her sword in hand, and sorce the insides to throw down their arms, and cry for quarter.

THREE other gallies, viz. the St. Laurence, commanded by Raphael Cotoner, the St. Mary, by the chevalier de Piancour, and the victory by the chevalier Noel de Villegagnon Chanforest, meet with a great galion, which, in order to draw on the knights, conceals her strength, and makes no parade with her artillery.

THE St. Mary, whose crew was in the best condition, was up with her before the two others; when, without considering the great disproportion there is between a single galley and a vessel of so vast a bulk, the chevalier de Piancour, who commanded her, went to lay her aboard, upon which the other gallies advance to succour him. The insidels, seeing their captain and principal officers killed, struck, after an engagement which had lasted seven hours, and in which the order

loft

00

loft nine knights, viz. Boisbaudran the general, Piancour, captain of the St. Mary, the chevalier Camillo Schotti, brother Sebattian Bertonmonbai, Charles Morans of St. Mark, brother Robert and Nicholas of Bouflers, and brother Stephen of Algre, all knights probationers, and brother Severin Richard of Allemand, a ferving brother; but a much greater number of them were wounded. The Turks loft 600 men, befides a confiderable number who were taken prifoners, and among the rest a lady of the seraglio, who was going out of devotion to Mecca, with a young child, the reputed fon of the grand feignior Ibrahim, who afterwards entered into the order of St. Dominic, where he went by the name of father Ottoman. The booty was fo great, that it reimburfed the treasury for all the expence the order had been at in fitting out its fquadrons.

IBRAHIN, hearing of the taking of this great galion, together with all the riches that were on board, fends a herald to declare war against the grand master and the order.

t

GREAT preparations made by the order to put itself in a condition to oppose the formidable power of the grand feignior. Succours, ammunition, and provisions are fent for from all quarters. A glorious and ever memorable action of Lewis vicomte of Arpajon, a nobleman of the first quality in France, who obliges all his vassals to take up arms; raises a body of 2000 men at his own expence; loads feveral veffels with ammunition and provisions, and fets fail with them, together with a good number of gentlemen, who were either his friends or relations; arrives at Malta, and presents the grand mafter with a fuccour, which was fo very confiderable, that the like could hardly have been expected from a fovereign prince. The grand mafter thought he could not better acknowledge a fervice of this importance, than by making him general of the troops, with the power of naming three lieutenantgenerals to command under him in those places where he could not be prefent himfelf.

 L_3

THE

THE event shewed that the grand seignior's threatning of Malta was no more than a falle alarm: but he invaded the ifie of Candia, befieged and took Canea. All his naval and land forces, his mighty fleets and confiderable armies, fell upon that island. Malta, now freed from any danger of an attack, sends a squadron to succour the besieged. The viscount of Arpajon takes leave of the grand master, who, in order to acknowledge the fuccour he had to generously brought them, figns a bull in form, with the confent of the council, granting him and his eldest son the privilege of wearing the gold cross of the order, and declaring that any one of his younger fons, or his descendants, should be received, during their minority, into the order without paying any fees, and be honoured with the great cross as soon as ever they should have made their profession; and that the chief and eldest branch of the family might quarter the cross in their coat of arms.

THE cope, at the king of Spain's request, defires the grand master to give the great cross to 1646. don Philip, fon to the king of Tunis, who was turned Christian. The council oppose it vigorously, from the aversion they had of seeing a moor, whose conversion was much to be suspected, fill up one of the first dignities of the order.

BROTHER Jey, marshal of the order, is named general of the gallies, but refuses that post, from gave him a right of commanding by fea as well as by land. But embarking afterwards, in order to join the Venetian fleet, he meets an Algerine corfair in the channel of Malta, near cape Paffaro; an engagement enfues, in which the marshal is shot with a musket ball, of which he dies.

MASSANELLO railes a very dangerous sedition in Naples.

THE adventures of Jacaya, a real or pretended prince of the Ottoman house; his letters to the grand master. Cardinal Maurice of Savoy endeavours to engage the order to declare in his favour, notwithstanding the ext the uncertainty of his pretentions. The grand mafter excuses himself, because, as he said, it would be impossible to bring his designs to bear, or to support his pretended right to the throne of Constantinople, without the concurrence of the greatest princes of Europe-

Port Innocent X, in prejudice of the privileges of the order, confers the commandry of Parma upon young Maldachino, nephew to Donna Olimpia, his holineis's fifter-in-law. The order fends embaffadors to all the princes of Christendom to complain of this injustice, and to represent to them, that the order would be disabled from fitting out any squadrons angainst the infidels, if it should be stripped in this manner of its best commandries.

DEATH of the chevalier de Guise, who was killed in trying a cannon.

THE treaties of Munster and Osnaburg deprive the order of a good number of commandries to bestow them on the protestant princes of Germany.

A FAMINE in the island of Malta. Cinquars, commander of the St. Francis galley, meets a Flemish ship laden with 2000 load of corn, just purchased in Puglia: the master refuses to sell it to the grand master; but a sudden storm forces him to put into the harbour of Malta, where he sells his corn to the great satisfaction of the people.

The gallies of the order, after fcouring the Levant feas, come back, and put into the port of Meffina. The magistrates of the city, from the apprehensions they were under lest these gallies should, in their return to Malta, seize upon some merchant ships which were coming that way loaden with corn, lay an embargo on the St. Joseph galley, commanded by don John di Bichi of the language of Italy, by way of hostage; but suffers the other three gallies, commanded by captains of the language of France, to go out of their port. These officers deliver the grand master a letter from the magistrates of Messina, by which they tell him, that the only reason of their laying an embargo on the St. Joseph

Joseph galley, was in order to employ it in quelling an influrection of the people, who suffered exceedingly from the dearth of corn. The grand master answers, that he is willing to believe they have no direct intention to offend the order, by an embargo which was so highly injurious to it; but that they do a great injury to Christendom in preventing the gallies from returning to Candia to the succour of the Venetians. However, the grand master sends to the port of Augusta for corn, which the magistrates of that town were ready to furnish the order with.

THE famine increases at Malta: there is no wheaten bread to be had, not even so much as for the infirmary; so that the knights are forced to live on barley bread. They send every where for corn; but the captains of the vessels of the order are forbid to touch at the rorts of Messina and Palermo.

THE grand feignior Ibrahim is strangled in an insurrection of the janizaries, and they place Mahomet IV.

his eldest fon, on the throne

CASSEIN, the Turkish general, pursues the war in Candia with great vigour, notwithstanding the revolutions which had happened in the empire.

A GREAT dispute carried on in the court of Rome. between the grand mafter and Imbroll prior of the church. This prior, who was a feditious man, pretended to have a right, by virtue of his own authority, and without the grand mafter's conient, to convene an Assembly of the brother chaplains, as if those serving brothers as wells as himfelf, were not dependant on the grand master. The second point in dispute was this prior's pretending that he only had a right, independently from the grand master, of visiting the nuns of the order, and appointing them confessors. The grand affair in question was, to get the pope to confirm the two volumes of the statutes of the order, which that prior had compiled, and which he was suspected to have modelled according to his own private views, to the prejudice of the supreme and lawful authority of the superiors of the order.

PAUL LASCARIS CASTELARD Grand Master. 129

The battle of Foggia, at the mouth of the Dardanelles, in which the Venetians defeat the Turks, and take and burn a good number of their ships.

CONTINUATION of the flege of Candia, which is defended by Mocenigo captain general, Morofini proveditor, the governor of the place, and the commander Balbiano general of the gallies of Malta, who being a man of very great experience, was for that reason called to all the councils of war. There was a debate at this time, about an half moon at the bastion of Betlem, which the Turks had taken, and thereby put the rest of the place in danger. This affair was canvaffed in the council, when the commander Balbiano offered to recover the works; and, in order to effect it, he put himself at the head of thirty knights, and an hundred of the bravelt foldiers of his galley, commanded by the chevalier de Sales, nephew to the famous Sir Francis de Sales bishop of Geneva. The attack is made in the night: the knights in the dark get upon the half-moon and kill all before them. The Turks wake in a furprise, but stand their ground and fight at first with vigour: but being too few to oppose the knights, they are forced at last to fly, to leap over the parapet, and abandon the half-moon.

THE Turkish general makes them the most heavy reproaches for their cowardice; they are ashamed of having quitted their post, and, in order to recover their honour, return the next morning in greater numbers. Cassein, to facilitate their success, springs a mine, which blows up several knights, and, among others, the chevalier de Sales. This knight falls back into the mine, where he is buried to the middle; but being dug out he persects his lodgement, and gives the Turks such a warm reception that they are not fond of renewing the attack.

Notwithstanding the treasury was at so low an ebb, and that a grievous famine insested the isle of Malta, the grand master builds fort St. Agatha on the coast of Meleca, and supplies it with arms, provisions and a good body of knights, in order to oppose any defect of the corfairs on that fide.

THE governors of Sicily, not fatisfied with having refused the order liberty to export corn from 1650. thence to supply the isle of Malta, refuse likewise to allow them to have any bisket made for their gallies, under pretence that it would be a prejudice to the subjects of his catholic majesty. The grand master sends an embassador to don John of Austria, who interposes with his authority, and removes these obstacles.

FOUNDATION of a library at Malta, and a statute made providing that all the books which shall be found in the personal estates of any of the knights, shall not be fold like their other essects, but shall be transported to Malta.

The discontent of the king of Spain's ministers in Sicily against the order is renewed. on occasion of the continual seizures which the French made of the Sicilian and Spanish ships; most of the French vessels being commanded by knights of that nation; which hinders the gallies of the order from being supplied with provisions from Sicily.

SETERAL prizes made by the gallies of the order near cape Bon. Among others an English 1651. veffel is taken, with a cargo on board belonging to the infidels. They here make thirty-two prisoners, among whom is Mahomet Ben Thess, son to the king of Fez and Morrocco, a youth of twenty-one years of age. Upon their return from this cruising, the gallies of the order, and those of the pope, join the Venetian fleet.

THE Spanish ministers and governors in Sicily, incensed more and more at the continual prizes 1651. made by French vessels, most of which were commanded by knights of that country, order all the estates of the order in that kingdom to be sequestrated, and issue out a prohibition against supplying Malta with any provisions, or suffering any

PAUL LASCARIS CASTELARD Grand Maffer, 121 any Maltese vessels, to put into the ports of the island.

THE grand master and council, surprised at these rigorous orders, endeavour to pacify the king of Spain. and accordingly iffue out a general prohibition, by which all the knights are forbid going on board any ships that were to act against Christian princes: and the agents of the order at the court of France make fresh instances, that the French ships may not come and attack those of Spain in the channel of Malta, and off of the coast of Sicily. They likewise sent express orders to all the governors in the ports of Malta to keep off the rovers, and not fuffer them to put into the ports of the order, as happened afterwards to the chevalier de la Carte, who, after a smart engagement off of Goza, offering to put into the road of Marza Sirocco, was fired upon by the batteries planted there, and forced to tack about; which coming to the knowledge of don John of Austria, the king of Spain's generalissimo, he took off the fequestration and opened a free commerce between Malta and Sicily.

THE crew of the Maltese gallies, being very much weakened by the many voyages they were obliged to make into Candia, the pope being informed of the difficulty the order had to fit out a squadron for want of slaves, made the grand master a present of 250.

THEY build a seventh galley at Malta. 1652.

The order makes a purchase of the isle of St. Christopher in America; for which they were obliged to the chevalier de Poincy. He commanded in that island; but the property of it was vested in a company of French merchants, under the protection of the crown of France. He had built a castle there, which he fortisted like a citadel, and had several vessels for the desence of the island against the attempts of pirates. His enemies dreading his power, conspired to ruin him, or at least turn him out of his government. Our knight, having notice of their evil designs, writes to the grand master on that subject, and tells him that his effects effects were very considerable, but that if he should die in the island, they would be seized on, either by the company of merchants or by his own enemies; and therefore he desired they would send him a knight or two to supply his place in case of his death, that the order might not be defrauded of what he less behind him. The grand master referred the care of this affair to brother Charles Huault de Montmagni receiver of the priory of France, giving him at the same time an express commission, as procurator general of the order, to go over to the isles of Amerrica that held of the crown of France, and a power of chusing some other knight to be his companion in the voyage, and supply his stead in case he died.

The grand master did not stop here; but being fully satisfied of the good intentions of the chevalier de Poincy, who acted in all this affair only for the good of the order, he wrote to the bailiff de Souvré, his embassador at the court of France, and directed him to use his endeavours with the king to gain two points that seemed to him to be of great importance; the first was to interpose his royal authority to put a stop to the enterprises of Patrocles de Thoissy, the chief of the opposite party, and a mortal enemy to the commander de Poincy; the other article was to purchase the rights of the proprietors of the island, and to get if he could Gaudaloupe, Martinico, and other neighbouring isles, comprehended in the purchase.

This negotiation was carried on by the bailiff de Souvré with all imaginable dexterity, and the island of St. Christophers was sold to the order by a contract made at Paris, and ratified at Malta. This conveyance was made on two conditions; the first was, that the order should engage to pay all the debts which the company of merchants, who were the proprietors, owed to the inhabitants of the island; the second was, that they should pay the sellers the sum of 120,000 livres tournois. In this bargain was comprehended not only the property and lordship of St. Christophers, and the little neighbouring isles, as St. Bartholomew, St. Martin, St. Croix, and some others; but likewise all the dwellings, lands, negroes, merchandize ammunition and provisions, which was afterwards confirmed by the letters patent of king Lewis XIV. granted at Paris in the month of March 1653. After this purchase, the grand master appointed the chevalier de Sales to assist with his council the chevalier de Poincy, who was very old, and who died soon afterwards. The knight, far from having any personal estate to enrich the order, left only behind him several debts, which he had contracted to support himself in his government.

THE gallies of the order join the Venetian fleet, and fail for Candia. Contagious distempers destroy abundance of the foldiers and crew of the Maltese squadron: the general brings it back in a weak condition. In the midst of the channel of Malta, he meets three vessels of Tripoli: they cannonade one another. The Maltele general, not finding himself well enough manned to attempt to board them, fends to Malta for fuccours. The convent murmured exceedingly on this occasion, and said, that the general wanted courage more than force, and that it was the first time the gallies of the order had passed a whole day in cannonading the enemy's ships without laying them aboard; however, the grand master sent out several gallies, each manned with ten knights, a good number of foldiers and flaves. But there had rifen a gale of wind in the night that was favourable to the infidels, who had made use of it to sail off; fo that the next morning when they were preparing to attack them, they found them gone off clear, without their being able to guess which way they steered their course. The squadron was obliged to return back into the harbour of Malta, to the great mortification of the grand master, who expected to see his great nephew that commanded the fquadron return back crowned with glory and victory.

A GREAT dispute happens at the entry of the emperor's embaffador at Madrid, about precedency, between Abbé Icontri the grand duke of Tuscany's em-

baffador, and the bailiff brother don Juan de Tordefillas, embaffador of the order. The grand duke's embaffador pretends to precede that of Malta, who oppoles it with vigour, and preients a memorial to his Catholic majefty, wherein he shewed, that the ministers of the order of Malta, had, time out of mind, preceded all such as were not deputed by kings, and who were not allowed to enter when the kings of Spain went to mass. This dispute is decided in favour of the embafsalor of Malta.

THE court of France is displeased at the grand master's conduct in having issued out orders by 1654. which the king's ships were denied the use of his ports. A French fleet being in the channel of Malta was attacked by a terrible from, and offered to put into a port of the island for shelter. The grand mafter, who was afraid of incenfing the Spaniards, refules to let the king's ships come in, and sires upon The whole court exclaimed against the action, and called it high treason: and they talk of no less than leizing all the estates of the order within the kingdom, and uniting them to the demesnes. The grand mafter excuses himself on account of the engagements which his predecessors, with the consent of our kings, had entered into with Charles V. and fends the deed of conveyance of the ifle of Malta to court; at last this affair is made up by the dexterity of the bailiff de Souvré, and the credit of M de Lomenie secretary of state, one of whose sons had been admitted into the order a little before, though he was a minor, and the grand mafter afterwards by way of acknowledgement gave him the commandry of Rochelle.

THE Venetians prevent the Turks from coming out of the Dardanelles. This occasions an engage-555. ment, in which the insidels lose 14 vessels, feven of which were burnt, two stranded, and five taken.

Five gallies of the order, coming into the port of Genoa, and faluting only the town and the king of Spain's admiral, the Genoese order them to be attacked, the Genoese admiral pretending a right to be saluted as well as the rest. The knights resused it; whereupon the magistrates signify to the commodore, that they will sire upon his gallies, and sink them if he does not comply. The general of the gallies, to save his squadron, is forced to give them satisfaction.

As he goes out of the harbour, he meets a Genoese vessel, and sends to speak with her. Finding it was no more than a merchant ship, he only tears to pieces the slag, which had the arms of the republic on it. till such time as he might meet with and revenge the insult that had been offered him, upon some gallies or men of war.

A DECREE of the supreme council, declaring, that no Genoese shall be admitted into the order, till such time as satisfaction shall have been given for the violence which had been committed upon the squadron of the order.

THE Maltese squadron goes to join the Venetian sleet, which they meet at the mouth of the Dardanelles, consisting of 24 gallies, seven galeasses, and 28 large ships, under the command of Laurence Marcello. The grand seignior's armada, commanded by Sinan Bassa, advances to open the passage. A battle ensues between the two sleets; the Turks are deseated by the Christians, who gain a complete vistory, and reduce the isle of Tenedos. But this advantage was bought dear by the death of the Venetian general, who was killed in the chagagement by a cannon shot.

The duke of Offuna, viceroy of Sicily, dying about this time, the king of Spain appoints brother Martin de Redin, of the language of Arragon, to succeed him; he goes from Malta to Sicily to take possession of his new dignity.

"THEY baptife at Malia the young Turk, supposed to be Ibrahim's son beforementioned, and Mehemet Binthesi, who passes for the son of the king of Fez and Morocco.

THE war of Candia may well enough be stiled the war of Malta, the order never failing to put every year a foundron to fea for the defence of 1657. that ifland. This year the gallies of the order joined the Venetian fleet, commanded by Lazaro Mocenigo a noble Venetian, in the channel of Jero. The chief delign of the Turks was to recover the ifle of Tenedos. With this view, Mehemet the grand visier kept a great body of troops near the Dardanelles ready to embark, in order to make a descent upon it. The Christian fleet coming near the place, and landing some troops to take in fresh water, the Turks attacked them, and fell with such fury on a German battalion, that not being able to fulfain the charge, they fled, and, falling foul on the other battalions, threw all into diforder and confusion. The Turks pursued them to the fea-fide, and cut a good number of them to pieces, among which was the chevalier de Tessancour.

THE Turkish fleet appears, consisting of 30 gallies, nine galeasses, and 18 ships, besides saicks and other small vessels. The commander of it had orders to sail out of the Dardanelles, and do all that lay in his power to recover the isle of Tenedos. The pope's gallies join the Christian fleet under the command of the prior de Bichi, to whom the Venetian general gives the precedence, on account of his representing the pope.

ANOTHER sea-engagement at the Dardanelles between the two sleets. The Turks are deseated. The Venetian general ascribes the victory to the naval skill and valour of the Maltese squadron, and sends a brigantine on purpose to congratulate him on this occasion. But the general, desirous of burning some Turkish gallies, which had retired under the cannon of the fortresses, and advancing too far, a ball from one of the castles set five to the St. Barbe, which was boarded by the Venetian admiral, and blew it up. The general lost his life; and of 700 men that were on board, there were but 250 saved by the Christian saicks that hastened to their succour. The confederate sleet separates,

the

PAUL LASCARIS CASTELARD Grand Mufler. 137

the Maltese and the pope's gallies return towards the west, and the Venetians not being now strong enough to sight the Turkish sleet, the insidels besiege and retake Tenedos.

DEATH of the grand mafter Lascaris, in the 97th year of his age. The bailiff Lascaris his great nephew erected a fine monument for 1657. him in the chapel of the language of Pro-Aug. 14. vence, in the church of the priory of St. John, on which the following epitaph is engraved.

D. O. M.

"Hic jacet frater Joannes Paulus de Lascaris Castelard M. magister & Melitæ princeps, qui naicendo ab imperatoribus & comitibus Vintiniliæ accepit nobilitatem, vivendo in consiliis & I gationibus secit amplissiman, & moriendo inter omnium lacrymas reddidit immortalem. Regnavit annos XXI. inter principes fortunatus, erga subditos pater patriæ, erga religionem bene-merentissimus, septima trirerai quam annuis redditibus stabilivit, nova commenda quam instituit, aliis atque aliis ædisciis quæ construxit, tot terra marique victoriis omnibus celebris, soli Deo semper affixus, obiit die decima quarra Augusti, anno Domini 1657. ætatis suæ 97."

AFTER paying the last duties to the grand master, the convent was to proceed to the choice of a succession. There were two potent and formidable factions at Maka. Martin de Redin, prior of Navarre and viceroy of Sicily, was at the head of the first; and in his absence the commander don Antonio Correa Sousa his intimate friend had the management of his party. But there was another party formed called the flying squadron, consisting of old commanders and great crotses, who had been principally concerned in the government under the preceding reign; the inquisitor of Malta, Redin's enemy, was at the head of this cabal. He, in order to ruin the opposite party, presented a brief from the pope dated the 9th of December 1656, in which his holiness ordered him, in case of the death of the grand master Lascaris, to declare all such knights deprived of either active or passive voice, as should be convicted of having caballed or employed money, promises or threats for the election or exclusion of any person whatsoever; every such person the pope interdicted from a right of voting, as being a wicked and smoothacal person.

The inquisitor proposed by this declaration to make Redin's election miscarry; but it had a quite contrary effect. The knights of his party imagined themselves after this obliged in honour to persist in their first disposition. Notwithstanding all the declarations of the inquisitor, who signified by his secretary, that Martin de Redin prior of Navarre was excluded from the election, as being an ambitious person, who had employed unworthy expedients to advance himself to the grand mastership, this nobleman had a MARTIN majority of votes, and accordingly was DEREDIN. proclaimed grand master. Odi, in a rage entered protests against it. REDIN, to elude the effects of it, fent the pope an authentic account of his election, declaring to him at the same time, that if his holine's had any exceptions to his person, he was ready to renounce it. The pope, who did not care to be subservient to the passion of his officer, and was vexed that he had employed his authority in oppofing a knight that was a minister of the king of Spain, and the option of the greatest part of the knights who efteemed him, readily approved the grand mafter's election. He drew up a brief for that purpose, and fent it to the inquifitor with orders to carry it himfelf, and declare to the council, that his holiness acknowledged Redin for the lawful prince of Malta. Thus the very perion who had opposed his election with the greatest fury and passion, had the mortification to be as it were the herald to proclaim it. The prior de Bichi, nephew to the pope, and general of his gallies, came to Malta, where he waited upon the grand master, who conferred upon him the rich commandry of Polizzi in Sicily.

Sicily. And this nobleman, who was the favourite nephew of his holiness, having joined his gallies to those of the order, the grand master, before he went out of the harbour, made him a present of a cross set with diamonds, valued at 1200 crowns.

The grand mafter's first care was to provide for the security of the island, and to prevent the insides from making descents, especially in the night-time. For this end, he built towers all along the coast at proper distances for the peasants of each quarter of the country who mounted the guard to retire to, and made a fund out of his own purse for the substitutes of such as should be employed in this service, and keep watch in the night-time.

The pope recalls the inquisitor Odi, and Casanatta is put in his stead. The grand master orders, that whenever a knight who hath only the little cross, is invested with the character of an embassador, if there should happen to be any knights who are great crosses in the same court, they shall be obliged, for the honour of the order, to attend and wait upon him in all his functions.

The richest commandries become successively the prey of the pope's nephews. Alexander VII. gives the commandry of Bologua to Sigissimund Chigi, and divides that of Francinto three commandries, giving the best of them to Charles Chigi.

THE commander de Mandolx is appointed a second time general of the gallies: he puts to sea with his squadron to join that of the pope: he meets 1659. near Augusta with two brigantines of Barbary, which he takes, and the insidels that were on board them serve to recruit his crew of galley-slaves which was very much weakened. The two squadrons join, and receive, in an island of the Archipelago, a letter from the Venetian general, with advice that the grand seignior's sleet was retired into the barbour of Rhodes, but was immediately to set sail from thence to go to Constantinople, and that if they would come up and join the main sleet, they would have an opportunity of fighting fighting the infidels, and fharing with him in the glory of their defeat. The two fquadrons failing on, chace three Turkish galliots in their way. One of the three escapes by rowing vigorously; the two others run aground, and one of them is taken. The pope's general feizes upon it, and will needs carry it to Civita-Vecchia, to shew his master that he had been in fight of the encmy. He declares to the general of the order, that he is resolved to return wellward. This resolution of retiring furprised Mandolx exceedingly, who could not comprehend the reason of it, and who thereupon broke out into the most heavy complaints upon that account, and indeed in very harfh terms. But nothing could prevail upon the prior of Bichi, who was obstinately resolved to go: the Maltese general does not think proper to leparate from him, for fear of exposing the pope's iquadron to be attacked by the infidels; fo both figuadrons steer back to the west, and retire into their respective ports.

THE year following was famous for the peace between the two crowns of France and Spain, to 1660. the inexpressible satisfaction of the grand mafter and the whole order, who now saw themselves enabled to observe that neutrality between Christian princes, which the order had always professed ever since its foundation.

THE grand mafter, after having suffered the most racking pains from a stone of four ounces weight, died on the 6th February. His epitaph mentions his services, and contains an account of the several dignities he had filled up.

D. O. M.

"Æternæ memoriæ facrum M. magistri D. de Redin
"magni Xaverii ob genus propinqui, cujus ante æta"tem præmatura virtus Siculæ, deinde Neapolitanæ
"classiam præfecturam meruit. Adultus ad summum
"Pontiscem & Hispaniarum regem legatus profectus, "exercitus regios apud Catalaunos & Calicos, cæterosque Hispaniæ populos, summo cum imperio, rexit, in-

" varræ atque Siciliæ prorege princeps Melitæ electus, infulam propugnaculis ac turritis speculis, urbes aggeribus, horreis annona ac vario belli commeatu intitutis munivit. Ducis Bulloni exemplum secutus, expeditionis Hierosolymitanæ principibus Europæ se ultrò vel durem vel comitem obtulit. Obiit die sexta Februarii 1660, ætatis 70, imperii tertio.

de victoriis, meritis atque annis auctus, ex priore Na-

AFTER the grand master's funeral, the convent met, as usual, to proceed to the choice of his successor. The one and twenty electors, having duly weighed the merit and capacity of the candidates, agreed unanimously in the election of brother Annet de Clermont de Chattes Gesson, DECLER-bailist of Lyons; and the electing knight MONT. proclaimed him grand master of the order of St. John of Jerusalem. Two days after, the council acknowledged him as sovereign prince of the itles of Malta and Goza. THIS title of fovereign, which reflects an honour upon the families of the knights who are advanced to the grand maftership, was nothing extraordinary in the illustrious house of Clermont. Their ancestors, before the treaty made A. D. 1340, between Humbert Dauphin and Ainard de Clermont, enjoyed all the rights of fovereignty in the dominions they possessed between Dauphiny and Savoy. We find in hiftory, that the vifcounts of Clermont levied troops, made war, alliances and treaties, and laid what taxes they pleafed on their subjects before the treaty of 1340. These viscounts always kept strong garrisons in the towns and caftles of Chavacert and Saussin; places which, at that time, were looked upon as impregnable, and lay both of them upon the river Gué, which divides Savoy from the territories that belonged to the lords of Clermont.

Annet de Clermont rose to the grand mastership purely by his virtues. His courage, his piety, a distinguishing zeal for religion, his good nature and humanity in all his actions, and a most engaging and obliging manner of receiving people, made all the knights wish for the long continuance of his reign : but providence disposed otherways of him. This great man, who feemed to be born to make his order happy, fell fick three months after his election. Some wounds, which he had received at the fiege and taking of Mahometa in Barbary, bleeding afresh, put an end to his life in the 73d year of his age: he died in the arms of his knights, to their great affliction. His epitagh contains his character, and the principal actione of his life.

D. O. M.

" Hic jacet emin. Frater Annetus de Chattes-"Gessan, qui à comitibus Clarimontis ortum accepit, " à pontificibus facras claves & tiaram utramque per " majores in Calisto 2. sedis apostolicæ acerrimos de-" feniores. Hoe uno verè majorum omnium maximus " quod tiaræ supremam coronam adjunxit, creatus ne-" mine discrepante ex bajulivo Lugduni mag. magister " & Melitæ princeps. Eum apicem merita jampridem " exegerant, vota nunquam præsumpserant; sed vir-" tutes tulerunt suffragium, pietas in divinis, pruden-" tia in humanis, suavitas in congressu, majestas in in-" cesso, marescalli integritas, terræ marisque imperi-" um; de suo nihil ipse contulit, nisi quod amicis o-" bedivit. Regnavit ad perennem memoriam vix " quatuor mensibus: brevis vitæ nulla pars periit: " primam religioni, secundam populo, tertiam sibi, omnem Deo consecravit. Obiit inter lacrymas et 66 vota omnium, die secunda Junii 1660, ætatis suæ sep-" tuagesimo tertio."

Two days after they had paid the last office to the grand master de Chattes-Gessan, the chevalier d'Arfevilliere, of the language of Auvergne, grand marshal of the order, and whom the late grand master, a few days before his death, had nominated to the post of lieutenant-general to the mastership, called a general

affembly

affembly for the election of a new grand maker. After the preliminary ceremonies used on such occasions, the languages retired into their respective chapels, to chuse the three persons who were to vote in the election of a grand master, and to pitch upon a fourth voice which was to represent the knights of the language of England.

1. THERE were in the language of Castile and Portugal, thirty-two persons that had voices, who elected the chevalier de Ximenes, the great chancellor, Hozes, bailist of Lora, Barriga, the vice-chancellor; and for the language of England, they named the commander Xelder.

2. The language of Arragon, in which Catalonia and Navarre are comprehended, had thirty-five persons that had votes, who elected Bueno, prior of the church, Galdian, prior of Armenia, Raphael Cotoner, administrator of the bailiwick of Majorca; and for England they chose Nicholas Cotoner, brother to Raphael.

3. GERMANY had not above twelve persons that had votes in the convent, and their choice fell upon the grand bailist of Breslaw, Osterhaussen, grand prior of Denmark, and the commander Osotiscki; and for England, they pitched upon the commander de la Tour.

4. THERE were seventy-eight persons that had votes in the language of Italy, who named Sondrati, bailist of St. Euphemia, Bondinelli, prior of Aquila, with the prior of Rochelle; and for England, Tancred bailist of Venusia.

5. France had fifty-fix perfons that had votes, who elected Valençai, grand prior of Champagne, Anthony de Conflans, lieutenant to the grand hospitaller, and the commander Gilbert d'Eibene; and for England they named Joachim de Callemaïson.

6. THERE were eighty-nine knights that had votes in the language of Provence, who chose Monmejan a great commander, Polastron la Hilliere, prior of Toulouse, saint Marc, bailist of Manosque; and for England the bailist de Mandolx.

7. AUVERGNE staid in the nave of the church. near the person of the marshal d'Arfevilliere, on account of his post of lieutenant of the mastership. There were thirty-five votes in this language, who named the marshal de l'Arfevilliere, Gerlande, bailiff of Lyons. with the commander de l'Arfevilliere, brother to the lieutenant; and for England, the commander de la Roche.

INTRIGUE and cabal prevailed very much in this election; and the commander de Valençay, who fecretly aspired to this dignity, even during the lifetime of the last grand master, thought himself sure of nine But when the election came on, there were feveral other old commanders who put up as candidates. particularly the marshal de Arfevilliere, Raphael Cotoner, Monmejan, St. Mark, and Hozez above mentioned, who, though they had their several parties, yet all agreed to exclude Valencay, whose party seemed the most numerous and formidable.

VALENÇAY, to weaken this cabal, pretended to give up his hopes and pretentions, and accordingly told the principal leaders of the opposite party severally, that he and his nine friends would readily join in their election; which put them upon their guard against one another: but Bueno, prior of the church, found out the artifice, and affired them that Valencav defigned only to disunite them with his infidious promiles: and that therefore, in order to shew him they were not to be imposed on, and to exclude him entirely, they should all of them by concert compromise their votes, and leave it entirely to some one of their party to dispose of them, taking an oath to concur bona fide in the election of such person among their number as he should judge most deserving of the post of grand master. Twelve old commanders or great croffes came into the propofal, and agreed in naming the great commander Monmejan, a knight highly esteemed for his probity, to be the person to whom they would refer the disposal of their votes. He was far from imitating the grand master de Gozon on the like. occasion occasion and naming himself, but declared in the asfembly, that he thought they could not make a better choice than of the perion of Raphael de Cotoner, bailiff of Majorca.

THESE twelve electors, concurring with the nine of Valençay's party, chose three others out of those that had been named for the language of England, who were the bailiff de Mondolx, Tancred bailiff of Venusia, and Nicholas Cotoner bailisf of Negrepont. These twenty-four electors chose brother John Diodati, prior of Venice, to be prefident of the election, the commander brother Denis Ceba, of the language of Italy, to be electing knight, the commander brother Francis Deidié for chaplain of the election, and the commander brother Michael Porruel, of the language of Arragon, for ferving brother of the election election put an end to that of the twenty-four, and these last having all the power lodged in themselves, chose thirteen new electors, which, with them three, made up the number of fisteen, who were to have the final nomination of the grand master.

1. BARRIGA, of the language of Castile and Portugal, vice-chancellor of the order, was the first person elefted.

2 THE commander brother Anthony de Glandeve Castelet, of the language of Provence, chose for the language of England.

3. THE commander brother Adrian de Contremolins, of the language of France.

4. THE commander brother Lewis de Fay Gerlande, of the language of Auvergne.

5. THE commander brother Adolfe Frederick de

Reede, of the language of Germany.

6. THE commander brother Henry de Villeneuve Torenque, of the language of Provence.

7. THE commander brother John de Forsat, of the language of Auvergne.

N

o. THE

8. THE commander brother Henry de la Salle, of the language of France. Vol. V.

9. The commander brother Francis Ricafoli, of the language of Italy.

10. THE commander brother Isidore d'Argai, of the language of Arragon.

II. THE commander brother don Antonio Correa de Soura, of the language of Castile and Portugal, for England.

12. THE commander brother Francis Wratislau, of the language of Germany.

13. THE commander don Lewis Kelder, of the language of Castile and Portugal.

THE fixteen electors, after taking the usual oaths, and shutting themselves up in the conclave, directed the electing knight to go up into the gallery which looks into the church, and proclaim that

RAPHAEL COTONER.
LIGOO.
June 16.

looks into the church, and proclaim that they had chose brother don RAPHAE EL COTONER, bailiss of Majorca, to be their grand master. Immediately Te Deum was sung by way of thanks.

giving; and all the knights came afterwards to kifs his hand, and take the oath of obedience, and the next day the council gave him the title of fovereign prince of the ifles of Malta and

Goza.

WE observed, under the year 1645, that the Turks, after having threatened the isle of Malta with a sudden invasion, fell with all their force upon that of Candia, which belonged to the state of Venice. St. Theodora was the first place they attacked. They carried it without any great resistance, and put all the garrison to the sword. They next invested Canea, both by sea and land, and took it after a bloody siege, which lasted forty days. The governor surrendered upon honourable terms; and the insidels were very punctual in keeping the articles of the capitulation.

THE year following, the Venetian, the Maltese, and the pope's gallies. landed a considerable body of troops, under the command of the duke de la Valette. This general intended to retake Canea, and invested it; but the Turks came with a considerable body of troops and forced him to raise the siege. They afterwards took Rhetimo, Muscava, Melo-potamo and Calamo. Their principal design was to besiege the capital of the island; but as they were sensible the place was fortisted both by art and nature, and that there was a garrifou in it numerous enough for an army, they only built a fort to hinder their incursions, and to block up the place. This fort they called New Candia, and surnished it with a garrison of 6000 men.

The two parties carried on the war for feveral years with various fuccess. The Venetians, sinding themselves pressed by the formidable power of the Turks, applied to most of the European princes for succour; pope Alexander VII. and Raphael Cotoner, grand master of Malta, sent them their gallies. Lewis XIV. king of France, sent them also 3000 men, under the command of a prince of the house of Est. But this prince being ready to embark, the commander de Gremonville, of an illustrious family in Normandy, whom the king named for the prince of Est's lieutenant, and the chevalier Paul, a serving brother, and one of the ablest sea-officers in Europe, were appointed to carry over the troops.

The duke of Savoy fent two regiments of foot of 500 men each. The Genoese offered a considerable succour of men and money, provided the Venetians would treat them as their equals. But as those two republies had, time out of mind, fought against one another to determine that nice dispute, the Venetians were so jealous of their superiority, that they resulted to accept the Genoese reinforcement upon that condition.

THE defign of the Christian generals was to recover the town of Canea; but not having troops enough to besiege it in form, and to hinder the insidels from throwing succours into it, they resolved to take some forts that were in the hands of the Turks, and to lay in the neighbourhood of Sada. Their first attempt was upon the post of Sancta Veneranda, which the infantry took by storm. The Turks, at the noise of this attack,

 N_2

attack, advanced that way, and came to an engagement with the battalion of Malta, which repulsed, and put them to flight. They next took Calogero, which the Turks abandoned; and Calami, which took them up no more time than was necessary to adjust the capi-Apricorno made a better defence: it was a place of difficult access, by reason of a narrow wav which they must necessarily pass through, and which the Turks had, in a manner, stopped up, with a prodigious number of trees they had felled for that purpole. Some squadrons of their troops sallied out of the place to reconnoirre the forces of the Christians. Garenne, a French officer, at the head of two fquadrons, charged them briskly, and put them to flight. But some Turks observing, that he, in his eagerness to pursue them, had advanced a confiderable way before his main body, they turned short upon him, and struck off his head at once with a fabre. The campaign ended with different fuccess on both fides. The Christians, who beat and were beaten on feveral occasions, retired to Cicalaria, a place covered on one fide with inaccessible mountains, and on the other by a wood; and the Turks encamp at Maleta.

The 24th of January, of the following year, the general of the gallies of the order met a veffel 1661. of Tunis off of cape Paffaro in Sicily, which he took. He made, on this occasion, 130 slaves, among whom was the cadi dey of Tunis's son, and a choaoux of the grand seignior's, who had been carrying his orders to Algiers, Tunis and Tripoli, and other places on the coast of Barbary. Gravié, a serving brother, as he was cruising near Tripoli, took soon afterwards another ship of the insidels, with 150 Janizaries on board, designed to reinforce the garrison of

Towards the middle of April, brother Paul, a serving brother, entered the port of Malta, with three of the king of France's gallies, and the grand master sent him a compliment by his seneschal. As soon as he landed, he went up to the palace to pay his duty to him.

Gigibarta, a fortress of Barbary.

him, as to his superior; and the grand master received him with great demonstrations of kindness, omitting no testimony of that regard which he thought due to the merit and valour of a person, who had raised himself from a private sea-officer, to the post of lieutenant to the lord high admiral of France.

THOUGH the grand mafter was at a very great expence in fending confiderable fuccours to Candia, nevertheless, by his good management, there was no want of funds for other purpotes; of which he did not fail to make a worthy use, suitable to his natural generosity, and the magnificence of a great prince. He employed part of them this year in enlarging the infirmary; and, at the same time, beautified the church of the priory of St. John with excellent paintings and pictures of devotion, which still remain in that church as a perpetual monument of his piety. In the mean time, the gallies of the order, putting to fea, joined the pope's fquadron, which was commanded by the prior de Bichy, near Augusta; failing afterwards into the Archipelago, they met the Venetian fleet near the ifle of Andros, and went together in quest of that of the Turks. fcoured all the feas thereabouts; but having no manner of news of it, the allies leparated in order to return home. The Maltele gallies, keeping on their course, met, off the coast of Calabria, two Barbary galliots of fourteen benches each, which the knights took after a flight refistance. This is reckoned to be the year when the senate of Venice, in consideration of the continual fervices which the republic received from the order, made a decree, by which the knights of Malta were allowed to wear their arms at Venice, and all other places within their territories: a privilege that was not indulged the natural fubjects of the thate. In the beginning of the year 1662, the doge used great inflances with the grand matter to fend out the gallies of the order. Cotoner thought 1663, at first that he, out of respect to the holy see, ought to wait for the pope's squadron; but having advice that his holiness kept them at Civita-Vecchia, through the apprehensions he was under of his most Christian majesty's just resentment for the insult which had been offered the embassador of France and his lady by the pope's guard of Corsi, the gallies of the order put to sea on the 15th of May, under the command of the commander de Breslaw, and sailed for the Levant. After some prizes of small consequence, which the general of the gallies sent to Malta, he joined the Venetian sleet upon the 22d of the same month, near the isle of Andro. George Morosini, a noble Venetian, was the admiral of it, who told him that the Turks had sitted out no sleet this year, and that therefore he should employ the forces of the allies in cruising at sea, and scouring the coasts of the insidels.

N 3 through

The grand master Cotoner dies of a malignant and contagious sever, which ran over the whole island, and was particularly rife in the city of la Valette. He was a prince truly worthy of his dignity, prudent in his conduct, pious in his sentiments, magnissicent in his way of living, and without any view but the defence of the Christians, the service and happiness of his knights, and the honour of his order. The knights of his language erected a sine monument for him in the chapel of Arragon, and put over him the following epitaph.

Arragonum quicunque teris Melitense sacellum, Sacraque signa vides, suste viator iter.

Mic ille est primus Cotonera è stirpe magister, Hic ille est Raphaël, conditus ante diem.

Talis erat cervix Melitensi digna corona:

Tale suit bello consilissque caput.

Cura, sides, pietas, genius, prudentia, robur,

Tot dederant vitæ pignora cara suæ,

Ut dum cælestes citius raperetur ad arces,

Ordinis hæc suerit mors properata dolor.

Qui ne mutatas regni sentiret habenas,

Germano rerum fræna regenda dedit.

Cætera ne quæras, primus de stirpe secundum

Promeruit: satis hoc, perge viator iter.

On the 23d of October, Bandinelli, prior of Aquila, whom the grand mafter, a few days before his death. had named lieutenant of the mastership, called a general affembly of the convent for the election of a new grand mafter: there were in it at this time 293 persons who had votes. After the preliminary ceremonies, a circumstance happened in this which never happened before in any former election, which was, that the grand master's brother was chosen his successor. For though there were not wanting in the order, and even at Malta, feveral persons that might justly pretend to this dignity, and who were admirably well qualified for it, yet the merit of the two brothers was so generally known, that as foon as ever the eldest expired, there was an unanimous concurrence of all the voices, of people as well as knights, even before the election came on, in favour of bro-ther Nicholas Cotoner, bailiff of Cotoner. Majorca; fo that all the electors, the twenty-one as well as the fixteen, went into the conclave for form's take only, to keep to the letter of the statutes, and immediately afterwards brother don Emmanuel Arrias, vice-chancellor of the order, who was choic the electing knight, proclaimed him grand mafter: and the next day he was declared in full council fovereign of the ifles of Malta and Goza.

THE corfairs of Barbary, having carried their Piracies as far as the coast of Provence, Lewis the XIV. to repress their insolence, was advised to settle a colony on the coast of Barbary. and to build a fortrels, with a port well fortified, for the fecurity of his ships, and situated so as to be able to give advice from time to time when any squadrons of the infidels should put to sea. The village of Gigeri was proposed to him for this purpose, which lies near the ica between the towns of Algiers and Bugia, fifteen miles from both of them. Near this village there was an old castle built on the top of a mountain and almost inaccessible. The king appointed the duke of Beaufort great admiral of France, to put this project in execution, ecution, and defired the grand mafter to fend the gallies of the order to his affiftance. He did fo: and accordingly the Maltese squadron joined the king's flect in Port-Mahon. The Christians landed their troops without opposition, and immediately set to work in laying the foundations of the fort which they had orders The Moors, alarmed at an enterprise which tended to reduce them under subjection, ran to arms, and with their artillery demolished the works that had been begun. The duke of Beaufort detached part of his cavalry to repulie the enemy; but as this body had no infantry to sustain them, and the Moors had notice by their spies that the French were but few in number, they broke into the village fabre in hand, and forced the French to retire to the fea-fide. The duke of Beaufort finding he was not able to stand his ground in that country, refolved to embark, but could not do it fecretly enough to hinder the Moors from getting notice of it: fo that the rear, confisting of 400 men, were most of them either killed or taken prisoners. make the misfortune still greater, one of the king's ships, called the Moon, which was old, and had ten troops of horse on board, was cast away seven leagues from Toulon; fo that this expedition did not prove more successful than that of the emperor Charles V. at the fiege of Algiers.

The continuation of the affair of the commander de Poincy in relation to the ifle of St. Christo-1665. phers, which the order fells to a company of French merchants, who make a fettlement there under the king's protection.

This year the fquadron of the order fcoured all the feas of the Archipelago, but took no prizes except a few felucca's laden with corn and merchandize belonging to fome Turkish traders. Two vessels commanded by the chevaliers de Crainville and de Temericours were more successful. De Crainville was on board a ship of 40 guns, called the Garden of Holland, which he had taken the year before from an Algerine corsair, though he had only a frigate of 22 guns, on board of which now was Temericours, a young knight of great courage,

courage, who had already fignalized himself on several occasions. These two knights, who were intimate friends, roved in concert over all the seas of the Levant; and in the channel of the sile of Samos they met a caravan going from Alexandria to Constantinople, composed of ten ships and twelve saicks. The number and strength of the enemy served only to instante the courage of the two knights; they rushed into the middle of this little fleet, sunk some vessels, took four of the richest, with two small ones, and put the rest to flight.

THE same year was famous for an action which will immortalize the memory of the chevaller d'Hoquincourt. This gallant commander was in the port of the ifle Dauphine, when he was fuddenly invested by 33 of the grand feignior's gallies that were carrying troops to the ifle of Candia. The admiral that commanded the fleet landed all his best arquebusiers, who made a continual fire upon the Maltele vessel, at the same time that the Turkish gallies cannonaded it with all their artillery. The infidels, after mauling the tackling of the vellel, advanced to board it; fome attack it at the poop, as others do at the prow. The knight makes head on all fides, as if he had been invulnerable, though his veffel was hurt in feveral places, and he had loft abundance of foldiers, he yet cleared it of all the Turks that offered to board him, and threw them headlong into the sea. The Turkish general, in a rage at this obstinate refistance, and ashamed of the little success of his gallies in close fight, ordered them to open their ranks, and leave him a paffage to come up with the veffel himself. At the same time his crew plied their oars, and vigoroufly pushed forward the admiral galley; but the effort he made threw the Maltele veffel clear out of the port, and, a favourable gale springing up, d'Hoquincourt got to the first Christian port, after finking feveral gallies of the Turks, and killing them above 600 foldiers.

An action of fuch diffinguished valour and resolution deserved a better fate than this gallant knight met with a little after. For he, this very campaign, being on board the same vessel, a sudden gust of wind dashed him against a rock near the isse of Scarpanta. The vessel was shattered to pieces, and the knight was drowned; and the chevalier de Grilles, his particular friend, and 170 soldiers or mariners, perished in this shipwreck.

THE duke of Beaufort great admiral of France, as he is in chace of some corfairs of Barbary, arrives in the harbour of Malta; he is faluted by all the cannon of the ports, but would not see the grand master, who resuled to give him the title of highness. A little after M. de la Haye the French embassador to the porte, passed likewise, and put in at Malta.

DEATH of Philip of Austria, the fourth of the name, king of Spain, who is succeeded by 1666. don Carloshis son. This change of sovereign occasions a new investiture, which the commander Galdian, general of the gallies, receives in the name of the order from the duke of Sermonetta viceroy of Sicily, and takes the oath of sidelity usual in such ceremonies.

THE commander d'Elbene, general of the gallies, comes with his squadron to Barcelona to convoy the empress who was going to the emperor, to whom she was married by proxy. This princess, after her landing at Final, wrote a very obliging letter to the grand master, to thank him for the good offices she had received from the general of the gallies.

THE pope makes three great croffes, the first of whom was one of his nephews, and the other two were considerable officers in his value.

THE grand visier Achmet comes with a considerable body of troops into Candia, to put an end to the war and siege of the capital of the island. The Venetians apply as usual to the pope and the grand master; whose squadrons join near Augusta, and sail from thence to the coasts of Candia, and the isle of Standia. Francis Morosini, a noble Venetian, was generalissmo of all the Christian army, Antonio Barbaro, another noble

noble Venetian, was governor of the town, and the marquess deVille, a Piedmontese, was commander of the troops in garrison, all generals of extraordinary valour; and though emulation made them enemies, and jealous of one another's glory, they yet made a gallant defence.

DEATH of Alexander VII. who is fucceeded by Clement IX.

CLEMENT, pursuant to the possession with which his predecessors had invested themselves, names the chevalier brother Vincent Rospiglioss his nephew to the bailiwick of St. Euphemia, vacant by the death of brother Philip Stondrati. This renews the uneasiness and complaints of the language of Italy, which was continually plundered and stripped of its rights by these papal nominations.

ARTICLES of agreement between the landgrave of

Heffe cardinal and grand prior of Germany, and John de Witte chancellor and pensioner 1668.

of the province of Holland, with respect to some estates of the order depending on the commandry of Harlem in that province, which the magistrates had seized on. By this treaty, in which the protection of his most Christian majesty, and the negotiation of the Comte d'Estrades, were of great service, the Dutch engage to pay 150.000 florins to the order, to indemnify them for the estates which they had seized on in the provinces of Holland and West-Frizeland; and the order, in consideration of this sum, renounced all their right to those estates, saving still to themselves their right to all the estates to which they had a title in the other provinces, with sull liberty to sue for their restitution, or get at least an equivalent for them.

THE marquis de Ville, general of the land forces in the isle of Candia, quits the Venetian service, out of disgust of the ill treatment he met with from general Morosini. The Venetian embassador, with the king's leave, proposes to the marquis St. André Montbrun to go over to Candia to command in the same quality. The honour of defending a place, for whose preservation all the princes of Christendominterested themselves, determines the marquifs of St. Andr. to accept the command. He fets out post and goes to Venice, where he embarks, and lands at the port of Trainate in the island of Candia on the 21st of June.

GENERAL Morosini gains a victory over the Turks at fea.

A STRONG succour of French troops arrives in Candia, confifting of 7000 men, under the command of the duke de Navailles. The duke of Beaufort great admiral of France commanded the fleet.

THE count of S:. Paul brother to the duke of Longueville was at the head of the volunteers.

т 660. among whom were the duke of Chateau- Thierry, brother to the duke of Bouillon, the duke of Roannez, and the cointe de la Feuillade.

THE order, ever zealous for the defence of the Christians, sends a battalion of 400 men into Candia, under the command of brother Hector de Fay la l'our Mauburg.

THE count of St. Paul, at his return from Candia, touches at Malta, where he is received with great honours, after having perfomed quarantine in an house situated at the Bormole.

THE duke of Navailles, when the time fixed by his instructions is expired, returns back into France.

THE Maltele battalion, after losing abundance of men, think of retiring from a place which in a few days confumed all the succours that arrived from abroad.

A FLEET of 40 ships arrives in Candia with a new reinforcement of 4500 men, most of them Germans, among whom were 400 vaffals of the duke of Brunf-Besides this reinforcement, count Waldeck arrives there at the head of 200 men; and the grand master of the Teutonic order sends a chosen band of 150 men well provided, besides several noblemen of different countries who came as volunteers, and fought under the banner of the order.

THE sieur de Temericourt, eldest brother to the chevalier of that name, cruiting at fea under the flag of Malta, took a Turkish ship of 40 guns near the isle Scarpante, commanded by the corfair Buba Affan. He manned it anew, and in company with another veffel commanded by the chevalier de la Barre, failed into the feas of Alexandria, where descrying two sultanas laden with merchandize, he advanced to get between them and the harbour. As his vessel was a better failer than his confort, he fell upon the fultana which was the farthest advanced, and, after pouring in a broadfide, prepared to board her, when he received a mutket-shot on the head that knocked him down upon the deck, which however did not hinder him from exhorting his officers and foldiers to continue the engagment. The infidels, feeing it would be impossible for them to escape from the Christians who had grappled the two ships together, desperately set fire to the vessel in order to make their enemies perish with them. The chevalier de la Barre, who was on the point of taking the second sultana, seeing the danger his friend was in, quits the fultana, runs to his fuccour, and clears him of the vessel that was on fire. But Temericourt did not live to enjoy his victory, he dying the next day of his wound; and the sultana, which la Barre was just upon the point of taking, made off whilst he was employed in affifting his friend, and got into the port of Alexandria.

THE grand master and the council send the commander brother Antonio Correa de Soufa, the grand mafter's gentleman of the horse, as their 1670. embassador into Portugal, to compliment don Pedro brother to don Alphonfo king of Portugal, upon his marriage with the queen his brother's wife, and his taking upon him the regency of the kingdom. He was ordered at the same time to demand back the grand priory of Crato, vacant by the death of cardinal don Ferdinand infante of Spain. But as the ministry of Portugal had got that rich benefice into their hands, they perfuaded the regent, that the nomination and patronage of it was lodged in the crown, and there-VOL. V. fore fore all the answer he gave was, that the clearing up of that affair demanded some time. However at last he gave up the priory to brother don John de Sousa, who had a true right and title to it by a particular grant from the convent.

The reducing of the ifle of Candia, and the peace which the Venetians had concluded with the Turks. make the grand mafter apprehensive that they would now turn their arms against Malta. To put the island in a condition of baffling all their efforts, he, in conjunction with the council, applies to the duke of Savoy, desiring of him an excellent engineer, Valpergo by name, who comes by his orders to Malta, and gives directions for the railing of new fortifications. The first was named the Cotonera. The next thing was to add new works to the Floriana, with a faussebraye and two bulwarks, one on the fide of port Meczet, and the other towards the great port : and in order that the entrance of the great port might be completely defended, they built a royal port, called Ricatoli, from the name of a commander who gave the order 30,000 crowns for that work.

DEATH of pope Clement IX. who is succeeded by Clement X. This pontiff writes a brief to 1671. the grand master to congratulate him upon the pains he took of fortifying an island which served for a bulwark to all the dominious of the Christian.

stian princes.

THE chevalier de Vendosine, in spite of all the opposition of the old knights, prevails with the pope to grant him an expectative grace upon the grand priory of France. This brief was at last registered in the chancery of the order, but upon condition that the new grand prior should make good the mortuary and profits arising from the vacancy to the order.

PRINCE Charles of Lorrain, son to the duke d'Elbæuf, and Maurice de la Tour d'Auvergne duke of Chateau Thierry, son to the duke of Bouillon, are received into the order.

The grand mafter and council finding the number of ferving brothers too great, make a regulation, for-bidding the reception of any more for the future, till fuch time as new orders should be issued out for that purpose.

ROME labours under a great dearth of corn: the cardinal Akieri his nephew writes to the grand mafter in his holiness's name, and de-fires him to fend the foundron of the order to convoy his ships. Orders were accordingly dispatched without loss of time for that purpose to the bailist de Harcourt, of the house of Lorrain, general of the gallies, and to the chevalier de Fovelle Ecrainville, who commanded the admiral galley.

Tax chevalier de Temericourt, a famons corfair, is attacked by five great veffels of Tripoli: he defends himself with so much courage and intrepidity, that after shooting the masts of two of them by the board. and killing abundance of their men, the infidels, despairing to take him, tacked about, and left him at liberty to keep on his way: but he was foon after caught in a dreadful florin, which drove him upon the coast of Barbary, where his vessel was call away, and he himfelf was taken by the Moors, who carried him to Tripoli, and from thence to Adrianople. Mahomet IV. who was there at that time, asked him if he was the person that with a single vessel had fought five of the largest of those of Tripoli. " 'Twas myself, re-" plied the knight. What countryman are you, " faid the fultan ! A Frenchman, replied Temericourt. You are a deferter then, faid Mahomet, " for I am in strict peace with the king of France. " am a Frenchman, fays Temericourt to him; but, " besides that quality, I am likewise a knight of Malta; " a profession which obliges me to expose my life a-" gainst all the enemies of the Christian faith." The grand feignior, desiring to get him into his service, sent him at first to a prison, where he was treated with great humanity, and made him all those advantageous offers O_2 that that might possibly tempt a young warrior who was but 22 years old; and, to encourage him to change his religion, he promised to marry him to a princel's of his blood, and to make him a basha, or his great admiral. But these pompous offers had no effect upon the young knight; he relisted them with as much courage and refolution as he had done their arms. The grand feignior, incenfed at his steadiness, resolved to try if harsh usage could not shake his constancy, and accordingly ordered him to be thrown into a dungeon for a fortnight. They there gave him the bastinado, put him to the torture, and mangled his limbs, during which this noble confessor of CHRIST JESUS did nothing but call upon his holy name, and implore his grace that he might die for the confession of it. In fine, the grand feignior ordered his head to be cut off; his body was at first left at the place of execution; but Mahomet, to prevent any veneration being paid to it by the Christians, ordered it to be thrown into the river which runs by Adrianople.

the officers of the order about the falute when the officers of the order about the falute when they met at fea: Lewis XIV. pronounces against himself. This negotiation, which was of a very delicate nature, succeeds by the address of the commander de Hautefeuille embassador from the order to his most Christian majesty.

The mainotes, of the Greek religion, and inhabitants of the mountains of the Morea, implore the grand master's assistance to enable them to throw off the Turkish yoke. The squadron of the order comes upon their coast; but finding them not united among themselves, some of them being for recovering their liberty, and others for continuing still faithful to the Turks, the gallies of the order gave over the enterprize.

In the year 1618, the duke of Offrog a Polish nobleman, had, with the consent of the republic, made the order of Malta heir to all his estate. This great family being now extinct by the death of duke Alexander

d'Ostrog,

d'Oftrog, the chevalier prince de Lubomirski gave immédiate advice thereof to the grand mafter. But duke Demetrius the petty-general of the crown, laying claim to the inheritance, under pretence that he had married the fifter of duke Alexander, the grand mafter tent prince Lubomirski a letter of attorney to maintain the rights of the order.

THE admiral brother Paul Raphael Spinola 1674.

takes three merchant ships richly laden, in the gulph of Magra.

THE viceroy of Sicily applies to the order for fuccours. The grand mafter immediately fends him the fquadron of the gallies. Several great croffes go on board them, as a testimony of their zeal for the king of Spain's service, whose subjects they were born. In the mean time, the chevalier de Valbelle throws a supply of French troops into Messina.

THE grand master Nicolas Cotoner makes an endowment to maintain the fortress of Ricasoli in the island of Malta.

THE king of England declares war a- 1675. gainst the rovers of Tripoli, and his ships are well received in the ports of Malta.

FREDERICK de Mogelin the king of Poland's envoy arrives at Malta, and presents the grand master with a letter from that prince, in which he tells him, that, as his territories were continually insested by the Turkish forces, he should be exceedingly obliged to him if he would make a diversion by some considerable enterprise. The grand master aniwers him, that by complying with the follicitations of his Polish majesty, he would do no more than ditcharge the obligations of his own prosession; that the order had always employed their forces against the insides, but that they would now encrease their armaments, in order to answer the wants and instances of his majesty.

THE viceroy of Sicily endeavours to engage the order, as being a feudatory of that crown, to make war against the people of Mcssina. The grand master answers him, that they are forbid by the very institution of the order ever to concern themselves in any warbetween Christians, and that there was nothing of that nature to be found in the deed of inseofment of Malta.

THE post-house is settled at Malta in the fort of Marza-muzet, which the grand master Manoel has in our time secured with very necessary fortifications.

CHARLES II. king of England writes in a very obliging manner to the grand master, to thank him for the great civilities he shewed to his admiral and his ships, which he received into the harbour of Malta.

THE Genoese embark some troops from the Milanese, and transport them into the port of Melazzo, 1676. where the gallies of the order were at that time under the command of the bailiff de Spinola, who, out of complaidance for the viceroy of Sicily, and forgetting the infult the fquadron of the order had received in the port of Genoa, confents that the Patron of that commonwealth fhould have the post of the Patron of Malta: the great affection he had for his country was undoubtedly the motive of his acting in that manner, and perhaps too it might be to make a compliment to Augustine Durazzo, commodore of the Genoese, who had married Spinola's niece.

A DREADFUL plague at Malta, which destroys a great number of knights, and abundance of people.

MALTA being almost depopulated, is no longer able to supply the same number of knights for the gallies; so that in the naval expeditions, where, before the plague broke out, they used to have one and twenty knights on board every galley, the number was this year reduced to eleven for the admiral, and nine for the other gallies.

The dignity of marshal being now vacant, the commader brother Lewis de Fay Garlande, and brother René de Maisonsense, both of the language of Auvergne, of the same standing in the order, and who had passed through the same employments, aspired to it in opposition to each other. After a long dispute, the grand master, and some common friends of the two claimants, finding

finding no way to decide the competitorship, persuaded them to agree, that they shall enjoy this dignity alternately, and each have his month.

MAISONSEULE dies two years after this compromise. Gerlande being lest alone in the post, puts to sea with sive gailles, and meets two 1678. Algerine corsains off of cape Passaro: but instead of laying them aboard, as was the constant practice of the knights, he only cannonaded the two corsairs: this made Maisonseule be regreted, and occasioned great complaints at Malta against Gerlande, who fairs: this made Mailonfeule be regreted, and occasioned great complaints at Malta against Gerlande, who excused himself by saying that the wind was against him.

Carrain Peter Electhes a native of Majorca, mosts

CAPTAIN Peter Fleeches, a native of Majorca, meets an Algerine corair in the same place, and finks him, but saves an hundred Turkish soldiers, whom he afterwards sold to the order for an hundred pieces of eight per slave.

THE pope is desirous of putting an end to the disputes between the order and the republic of Genoa. He speaks to the Maltese embassador upon that subject, who, by order of his superiors, told the pope, that the order was all obedience, and that, notwithstanding the insult which had been offered by the Genoese, it was yet ready to pay a blind and implicit submission to whatever determination his holiness should think fit to make in the case. The pope, not caring to take upon him the decision of that affair, it was spun out some time longer.

Don John of Austria, grand prior of Castile, being dead, the grand master and council design to retrench 3000 ducats from the revenue of that rich benefice, in savour of several persons: but the king of Spain, who laid claim to the right of patronage of that grand priory opposes the curtailing of its revenue.

PEACE concluded between France and Spain by the marriage of Charles II. with the prince is Maria Louisa, eldest daughter to the duke of Orleans, his most Christian majesty's brother. Brother don Juan de Villa Viciosa goes to compliment his catholic majefty in the grand mafter's name, and obtain his leave to export a quantity of corn, which arrives at Malta at a time when a famine was beginning to ravage the whole island.

THE grand master, who some years before had been seized with a kind of palsy, is now attacked with very fevere fits of the gout and 1630. stone. A slow fever steals away from him his strength by intensible degrees, without any way leffening his courage or his vigilance, but a dysentery forces him at last to keep his bed. He appoints brother don Arland Seralte, prior of Catalonia, to be lieutenant of the mastership, and dies with great sentiments of piety on the 20th of April, in the 73d year of his age. This prince, who by his artful management had procured his brother the dignity of grand master, owed his own advancement to his merit only. He kept up his dignity by a superiority of genius, that made him respected by all who approached him: he had an excellent talent at negotiations; was bold in his enterprises, and prudent in the choice of proper means to execute them: he had all his fellow knights for his friends, communicated his defigns but to very few among them, and never had a confident. He was buried in the chapel of the language of Arragon, and the following epitaph was put on his tomb.

D. O. M.

"Fratri D. Nicolas Cottoner, magno Hierosolymitani ordinis magistro, animi magnitudine, confilio, munificentià, majestate principi, erecto ad Mahometis dedecusex navigii rostris, ac sultanæ prædå trophæo; Melità magnificis extructionibus, Templorum nitore explicato, munitoque urbis pomærio, splendidé austà; cive è pestilentiæ faucibus pene rapto; Hierosolymitano ordine, cui primus post fratrem præsuit, legibus, auctoritate, spoliis amplificato; republica dissicillimis seculi belli temporibus servata: verè magno quod tanti nominis mensuram gestis impleverit, pyramidem hanc excelsi testem animi, D. D. C. sama superstes, " fuperstes. Vixit in magisterio annos XVI. menses " VI. obiit 29 Aprilis 1630, ætatis 73. Post ejus " obitum, executores testamentarii tumultum hunc fieri " mandavere."

THREE days after Cotoner's funeral, they met to chuse him a successor. Parties had been forming during his illness, and were still carried on. The treasurer de Vignacour was sure of ten votes, and did all he could to engage the Spanish language on his side, but in vain.

THE electors name the prior of Rochelle, D. Gregory Caraffa, a Neapolitan. This choice was agreeable to all, but especially to the Italians, who, for 128 years before, had not had a grand master elected from among their countrymen.

THE new grand master applies himself diligently to regulate the affairs of the order, and finish the fortifications that had been begun by his predecessor.

GENERAL Correa returns to Malta with fix Algerine ships, which he had taken, after having run a great risque of being taken himself.

THE bailiff Colbert fucceeds Correa in the post of general of the gallies of the order.

THE bailiff d'Arrias, who for 24 years had enjoyed the post of vice-chancellor, and distinguished himself in the discharge of it, made a voluntary resignation of his office to the grand master, who, upon the chancellor's presentation, appointed the commander Carriero a Portuguese, secretary of the treasury, to succeed him. Carriero's post is given to the commander Bovio, who was afterward grand prior of England.

BROTHER Jerom Molina, bishop of Malta, is translated to the bishoprick of Lerida. The king of Spain, upon the grand master's presentation, names brother David Coceo Palmieri, a man of admirable probity, to the fee of Malta.

THE king of France writes to the grand master, to notify to him the birth of the duke of Burgondy. Great rejoicings at Malta: the French knights of the three languages diftinguish themselves by the noble feasts they make on this occasion.

THE dukes of Ganfron and Berwick come to Malta. This last receives the cross from the hands of the grand master, with the title of grand prior of England.

THE Turks besiege the city of Vienna with a formidable army. John Sobieski king of Pol-

1633. and, the doke of Lorrain generalissimo of the emperor's forces, and the duke of Bavaria join to relieve it: The insidely are beaten in everal engagements, and are at last repulsed with so much loss, that they are scarce able to repass the Danube.

This fuccets induces pope Innorent XI. to conclude a league with the emperor, the king of Poland, and the state of Venice, against the insidels. The grand master is desirous to share in such a laudable engagement, writes about it to the pope, and prepares all is forces to join the confederates. The squadron of the order puts to sea, under the command of the builist of St. Stephens, alarms all the coast of Barbary, and drives the enemy out of the two islands of Preveta and Santa Maura.

A NEW armament of the order commanded by brother Hector de la Tour Maubourg. The 1685. Venetian fleet, and the pope's gailies join the Maleese squadron at Messina. Morosini, generalissimo of the republic, attacks Coron, and takes it after a stout resistance from the besieged. The knights distinguish themselves in the siege, by incredible efforts of valour, particularly by driving the insidels out of a fort which they had recovered from the Venetians.' General la Tour is killed in this attack.

FORT St. Elmo is rebuilt, and the castie of St. Angelo fortisted by the grand master's care.

THE knights put to sea again in the spring, under the command of Erbestin, grand prior of Hungary, meet the pope's gallies at Messina, and fail together for the Levant. The Venetian sleet joins them at the isle of Santa Maura. They besiege old Navarino, take it, and go from thence to attack new Navarino, a place of great importance, by its situation, and the convenience of its harbour, but defended by a strong garrison. Morosini, after some days slege, takes it, and advances with his sleet to Modon, a town of greater strength, but forced in like manner to surrender: several knights lost their lives at these sleges.

The confederates, encouraged by their good fucces, advance towards Napoli di Romania, the capital of the kingdom of the Moea. They land there on the 30th of July, and lay fiege to the place; they rout the ferafquier three times, as he attempted to relieve it, and take it after a month's fiege, and a gallant defence made by the besieged. General Erbestein sets sail for Malta. Nineteen knights were killed at this siege, with a considerable number of their soldiers.

THE commander don Fortunato Caraffa, the grand master's brother, prince John Francis de Medicis, prior of Pifa, brother to the grand duke, and brother Leopold Kollonistch, bishop of Neustat, are made cardinals.

NEW preparations are made at Rome for the Levant. The grand mafter fits out eight gallies, under the command of brother Claude de Mechetein. A descent in Dalmatia. The three fleets join before Castelnuovo, which surrenders, and thereby leaves the Venetians entire masters of all the Adriatic gulph. Pope Innocent XI. writes to the grand master to compliment him upon the valour which his knights had shewed in this expedition.

The duke of Uzeda is made viceroy of Sicily in the flead of count de St. Stephen, who, efcorted by a convoy of Maltese gallies, goes to take possession of the viceroyalty of Naples.

BROTHER don Emmanuel Pinto de Fonseca is made bailiff of Acre. Brother don Felix Inigo de Aierva quits the post of grand conservator for the bailiwick of Caspa. Brother

Ximenes

Ximenes de la Fontaza, bailiff of Negrepont, is made grand confervator, and is succeeded in his bailiwick by the great chancellor Correa. Brother don Philip Escoveda is made great chancellor. Brother Fabio Gori gets the bailiwick of Venusia. Brother Feretti, receiver of Venice, is made bailiss of St. Euphemia. The admiral Cavaretta takes the bailiwick of St. Stephens. Averardo de Medicis succeeds him in the admiralty, and Spinelli, bailiss of Armenia, is named general of the gallies.

THE squadron puts to sea again in the spring, being headed by the commander Mechatein. The 1689. generalissimo Morosini is made doge this year, and sends out the Venetian sleet. The two armies joining, attack the fort of Negrepont. The sleep proves long and difficult, and they are obliged to raise it at last, after having lost abundance of men, and 29 of the bravest knights.

THE grand master is sensibly afflicted at this loss. His grief, with a retention of urine, which 1690, came upon him at the same time, throws him into a fever: he gives away his effects, appoints his seneschal, brother don Charles Carassa, to be lieutenant of the mastership, and thinks of nothing but another world. He dies on the 21st of July, in the 76th year of his age, after having enjoyed the grand mastership nine years and ten months. Never was the humility of a religious united in greater perfection to the virtues of a soldier. He distinguished himself in a particular manner by his love for the poor. His body was carried to the chapel of the language of Italy, where he had caused a monument to be erected for himself. The epitaph which he himself composed two years before his death, is still to be read upon it.

D. O. M.

"Fr. D. Gregorius Caraffa Aragonius è principibus Roccellæ, magnus Hierofolymitani ordinis magifter, cui vivere, vità peractà, in votis erat. Quia mortem primam qui prævenit, fecundam evitat; hoc fibi

66 adhuc

" adhuc vivens non maufoleum, fed tumulum posuit re-" surrecturo satis. An. Dom. 1683."

THE following inscription was engraved on the marble under his statue.

" Emeritos venerare cineres, viator. Hic jacet Fr. " D. Gregorius Caraffa ab Aragonia, M. M. clarus genere, genio præclarior. Heroas, quos in nomine 66 gessit, in virtute expressit. Essusa comitate, dissulis triumphis, populos habuit amatores, orbem fecit admiratorem. Bis ad Hellespontum, toties ad Epi-€6 rum, Peloponnesum, Illyrium, impertito ductu, prævalida ope classes delevit, regias expugnavit. Mu-66 nificentia, pietate princeps laudatislimus. Urbem, Arces, Portus, Xenodochia, Templa ampliavit, re-" stituit, ornavit. Publico semper Religionis bono " curas impendit & studia. Ærarium ditissimo spolio cumulavit. Obiit die 21 Julii, anno æt. 76. mag. 66 " 10. fal. 1690."

NEW cabals for the election. They agree at last in favour of brother Adrian de Vignacourt, great treasurer of the order, nephew to ADRIAN Alef de Vignacourt, who was elected to the same dignity in 1601. He takes possession of the two islands, and sends the commander Riggio to Palermo to notify his election to the duke of Uzeda, viceroy of Sicily.

THE squadron returns from the Levant, whither it had been sent to join the Venetian sleet, and brings the first account to Malta of the taking of Valonne, which occasions great rejoicings.

THE grand master, from his great liberality, relieves the pressing necessities of the widows and children of all such of his subjects as had been killed in the last wars. Several knights follow his example.

THE order maintains a galliot well manned to give chace to the corfairs of Barbaty, who were continually roving up and Vol. V.

1691.

down

down the Sicilian sea, even to the very channel of the two iflands.

CARDINAL Pignatelli, a Neapolitan, is chose pope on the 8th of August, and takes the name of Innocent the XII.

THE grand master erects several magazines, and adds confiderable fortifications to all fuch places as were not in a good condition of defence. In the midst of these employments, which were only intended for the security of his order, he receives letters from the emperor Leopold I. acquainting him that the Imperial army, commanded by prince Lewis of Baden, had just gained so complete a victory over the Turks, that 30,000 of them had been killed on the spot.

A LARGE and fine arienal erected at Malta for building of gallies. The ministers of the court of Rome are for comprehending the estates of the order in an extraordinary tax, which the pope was raising upon all ecclefiaftical pofferfions. The new pope, of his own accord, exempts them from it, without staying for any remonstrances from the order; and, by a brief of the 7th of December, renews the permission which his predecessors had formerly granted of carrying the holy facrament on board the gallies.

THE grand prior of Messina, general of the gallies, puts to fea, and advances towards the coast of Barbary, without finding any opportuni-1692. ty to fignalize his courage. He fails for the Levant, joins the pope's gallies at Messina, and the Venetian army at Napoli di Romania: all the fleet goes to attack Canea, a place of importance on account of its port, and one of the most agreeable cities of the isle of Candia. After a fiege of twenty-four days, they are forced to retire, the leason being too far advanced. The foundron of the order returns back to Malta, at the time they were making public rejoicings there for the taking of the fortress of great Waradin by the imperial army.

THE marquess d'Orville, nephew to Vignacourt, arrives at Malta, where he is received with all the honours usually paid to the nephews of the reigning grand mafter.

THE ifle of Malta is greatly terrified on occasion of a dreadful earthquake which began on the 11th of January, at ten o'clock in the evening, and lasted three days, overturning several buildings in that space of time. The same carthquake destroys entirely the town of Agosta in Sicily. Four gallies arrive from that island, and bring the grand mafter an account of this misfortune. mediately dispatched away the general of the squadron with five gallies to go to the affiftance of the inhabitants; orders public prayers all over the island, and a fast of three days to appeare the wrath of heaven, and forbids the usual diversions of the carnival this year. He after this fets about repairing the damage which the earthquake had done in Malta.

1692.

SEVERAL vessels were in want of masts, rigging, and other things necessary for their putting to sea. The grand mafter fends for every thing that was wanting to the fleet, and has it brought from Amsterdam. He likeways gives orders for repairing the magazines and the ovens which the order had at Agosta. The commander Ferrao, who was entrufted with this commission, rebuilds these structures with much greater magnificence than before, and puts the arms of Vignacourt over them.

THE grand prior, after coasting all the isles of the Archipelago with his fquadron, returns to the bay of Terra-nova, gives chace to a ship of Tunis, and boards it notwithstanding its being defended by 130 soldiers, takes it after some resistance, and brings it to Malta. There he finds the grand mafter very much displeased with him. He was accused of having avoided an engagement with three corfairs and a tartan, which he met going to the Levant. The general clears himfelf by proving that he had purfued the enemy briskly till night came on, and refolved to attack them the next day, but that the corfairs got off in the dark, and he could never get fight of them afterwards. After a full examination into the affair, and the taking of depolitions in form, the general is declared innocent.

A NEW armament under the command of brother Francis Sigifmund, count of Thun, who was named general in the place of the grand prior of Messina.

TAKING of the town of Scio aftar a week's fiege.

THE king of France and the duke of Savoy are for raifing fublidies upon the estates of the order lying within their territories, under pretence of the excellive expence of the war. The grand master represents to them the privileges of the order, and both the princes desist from their design.

THE pope takes upon him the arbitration of the difference between the order and the republic of Genoa, and reconciles those two powers. Several Genoele are admitted into the order.

GENERAL Sigismund puts to sea again, and chases a ship of Tripoli. He takes it after an engage-1695. ment of two hours, and fends it to Malta, himfelf still keeping on his course towards the Levant. His voyage was entirely useless, because the Venetians, whom he joined, would not engage in any enterprife, under pretence that the feafon was too far advanced.

The grand master's sickness, which occasions great canvassings for the future election, but they 1696. are stopped by his recovery. The pope makes the order a present of a great number of galley-slaves whom he sends to Malta.

THE grand master is seized with a violent sever, and prepares for death. He names the bail of of 1697. Leza don Gasper Carnero, of the priory of Portugal, to be lieutenant of the mastership, parts with all his effects, and dies on the 4th of February, after having been grand master near seven years, and lived 79. His piety and innocence of life and conversation, had ever made up a character of this prince. His integrity and his beneficent temper procured him a general esteem; and he was never liable to any reproach,

ADRIAN DE VIGNACOURT Grand Mafter. 173

proach, but that of having suffered himself to be governed by some favourites who were much more intent upon their own interests, that they were on those of the order, or the honour of the person who gave them all his considence. They buried him in the chapel of the language of France, where this epitaph is to be seen.

D. O. M.

Eminentissimi principis
Fr. Adriani de Vignacourt mortales exuviæ
Sub hoc marmore quiescunt.

Si generis fplendorem quæras Habes in folo nomine,

Habes in assinitatibus penè regiis. Si religiose vitæ merita spectes,

Charitatem erga pauperes & infirmos indefessam,
Erga peste laborantes generosam Mirari poteris.

Et ita intemeratam morum innocentiam,
Ut mori potiùs, quam fædari voluerit,
Magni Aloffii ex patre nepos,

Integritatis, fortitudinis, & justitiæ laude Simillimus;

Tanti principis famam est assecutus. Vixit fanctissime, tanctissime obiit, anno falutis 1697.

The affembly for the election of a new grand mafter is held on the 7th of February; the electors are divided into feveral factions, but unite at last in favour of brother Raimond Perellos de Roccasul, of the language of Arragon, bailiff of Negrenout, and of Arragon, bailiff of Negrepont, and fixty years of age. I wo days after he takes possession of the fovereignty of the two islands; and the 15th he aisembles the council in order to reform the abuses that had crept into the order. The popes had frequently yielded to the importunity of some ambitious knights, and granted them briefs to be received great crosses of grace: which made the old knights, when they faw themselves supplanted by these young men of the recompence due to their fervices, retire frequently into their own countries; when, thinking they had iust reasons to be disgusted with the order, they became more indifferent to its interests, and lest their estates to their families; an affair, the care of which was of the utmost importance to the order. Accordingly they retolved to write to his holiness on that subject, and to defire him not to grant for the future any fuch briefs, which struck at the very foundation of their discipline. They likeways made a regulation, by which all fuch as were professed in the order were forbid to wear any gold or filver on their cloaths, and absolutely prohibited all games of chance. The duke of Veraguas, viceroy of Sicily, who had long folicited to obtain a brief in favour of the commander Riggio, receiver of Palermo, for the making of him a grand crofs, continues his infrances warmly, and fucceeds in obtaining ir, because they found the brief had been dispatched by Vionacourt.

P a knights,

PEACE concluded at Reswick between France and Spain. Public rejoicings at Malta upon that occasion. Boris Petrowits Seremetet, a near ιόο$. relation of the Czar's, comes to visit the grand mafter, with letters of recommendation from the pope and the emperor. He is received with all the honour due to his quality and merit.

POPE Innocent XII. puts an end to the disputes that had continued a long time between the bishop of Malta and the prior of the church, with re-1699. fpect to their jurisdiction. Both parties submit with joy to the decision of the holy father; and the grand malter, by way of acknowledgement, causes his holines's statue in brass to be erected over the great door of the church of Victory, with this inscription:

" INNOCENTIO XII. optimo & fanclissimo Pontisi-" ci, distidiis compositis inter ecclesiasticum & magi-

" strale forum exortis, utrique juribus pie servatis, " pluribus commendis liberaliter restitutis; Em. & " Rev. Dom. Fr. D. Raimondus de Perellos Roccaful, " grato & unanimi omnium voto, tot tantaque beneficia " æternitati dicavit MDCIC."

THE gallies of the order attack two veffels of Tunis. The wind shifting on a sudden parts them, and gives the corfairs an opportunity to make their escape. The grand mafter and council, having been milinformed of this accident, and fearing the officers had been wanting in their duty, appoint commissioners to examine into the affair, which they perform with the utmost care, and clear the officers of all manner of blame.

THE bailiff Spinola general of the fquadron, embark. ing on the 15th of February, spies a man of war belonging to the enemy off of Sicily, and comes up with her by hard rowing. The admiral-galley which followed him close, having lost its main-sail by a gust of wind. Spinola refolved to board her. The engagement was bloody on both fides. The commander Spinola, the general's brother, receives a mortal wound by the grand prior of Mellina's fide, who fought leaning upon his valet de chambre, being so very old that he could not stand unsupported. The valet de chambre is killed, and the prior holds with one hand upon the frame of wood that fultains the compais, and continues fighting. Victory was going to declare for the knights when the enemy's ship bears with all its force upon the admiral-galley, and fplits it. A fouth wind rifes and blows a terrible from, which disperses the squadron. The commander Javon, captain of the St. Paul goes to the fuccour of those who were cast away in the admiral, and faves fifty of them, among whom were general Spinola, the commander Brofia, and the chevalier de St. Germain, and refolves to stay in the same place to get off the rest, notwithstanding the remonstrances of the pilot, who affures them they were in great danger: " I shall be happy enough, says the captain, if I lose " my life in faving but a fingle man of them." The wind however drove him away in spite of all his endeavours.

deavours. Two and twenty knights, and above 500 men, both officers as well as foldiers, perished either in the engagement or the wreck. The other gallies are driven by the tempest towards the Levant; they join again at Angusta and return to Malta. The grand master provides for the subsistence of the families of such of his subjects as had perished in this engagement.

Perellos had long seen with pain, that ever since the order had laid aside their men of war, and had only kept up a squadron of gallies, the Barbary corsairs were continually taking the Christian merchant ships, making descents upon the coasts of Italy and Spain, plundering the villages, and carrying off from time to time a great number of families into flavery.

THE Christians had cast their eyes for upwards of fourscore years past upon the knights of Malta their old protectors for redrefs, but in vain: there had hitherto been always too many difficulties started before a fquadron of men of war could be provided at Malta: but Perellos being in the mastership, and assisted with the advice of the bailiff Zondodari who succeeded him, fancied that all these obstacles might be furmounted, and brought the council into his measures more eafily than he could have imagined. So that as foon as he had railed the funds necessary for building of men of war, he fearched through the whole order for a knight who had the most skill to inspect their buildings, and was the best qualified to command them. The choice fell upon the chevalier de St Pierre of Normandy, a captain in the king of France's fleet, who afterwards obtained the commandry of Pieton in the 'Tis to this comgrand mafter's gift for his fervices. mander we are indebted for the project to extirpate the corfairs of Barbary, which has been printed abroad among he works of the Abbé de St. Pierre his brother, and had been highly approved of by the grand mafter.

THE St. Paul galley is driven, by a gust of wind, upon the rocks of the live ifle of Ostrica near Palermo; and notwithstanding all that general savon could do, he was lost with three knights and 70 men of his crew, the rest were faved by the other gallies.

THE squadron returns towards the coast of Barbary, and meets the sultana Binghen, a large ship of 80 guns, with three hundred sighting men 1701. on board. The engagement was long, and the loss considerable on both sides; but at last the knights had the advantage, and carried the ship with them to Malta. The grand master ordered the standard of it to be put in the church of St. John at Aix, the birth place of the chevalier Ricard, as a monument of the valour of that knight who had chiefly contributed to DEATH of Charles II. king of Spain. Philip V. fucceeds him, and confirms all the privileges of the order.

the victory.

CARDINAL Albani is chose pope in the room of Innocent XII. and takes the name of Clement XI.

THE fquadron of the order, advances as far as Goletta, and attacks the infidels in the very port; they carry a large ship and a brigantine of the enemy back with them to Malta, having only lost one knight and four soldiers in this expedition.

THE grand prior of England goes to Rome in quality of embassador extraordinary, in order to prevail with the pope to make a regulation 1703. with regard to the inquisitor of Malta's pretensions concerning his jurisdiction. This affair met with several delays, but was at last terminated to the grand master's sacisfaction.

The squadron of ships commanded by the chevalier de St. Pierre sails towards the Levant, meets three ships of Tunis, and gives them chace. The St. James man of war loses its mast before the engagement, and goes off. The St. John attacks the enemy's admiral, which carried 50 guns, and had 370 sailors on board, and takes it whilst the rest of the enemy's fleet crowd all the sail they can to get off. This ship was added to the squadron of the order, and called the St. Croix, or Holy Cross.

THE

THE commander de Langon, carries a convoy of ammunition to Oran, and with a fingle ship 1707. of 50 guns passes through the midst of the Algerine steet, which fired upon him continually, and throws a supply into the place, notwithstanding all the efforts of the insidels, who sought in the presence of their king. This action occasioned his being raised soon after to the dignity of lieutenant-general of the squadron of the order, and commander of the men of war.

THE king of Spain writes to the grand master, by which he desires him to send the squadron of 1703. the order a second time to the relief of Oran.

Preparations are made for it, but not fent away, because of a report which was spread that the infidels had taken the place, and that the grand seignior was making a powerful armament.

PERELLOS, in the midft of his concern at this news, is attacked with the gout and a violent fever.

he receives the facrament with great fentiments of piety, and prepares for death, after having named the grand prior of Messina, Tancred de Sienna, to be lieutenant of the massership. Finding himself a little easier the next day, he gave brother Alexander Albani the pope's nepnew, who was afterwards bailist of Armenia, the commandry of Viterbo, that was fallen vacant by the death of Rondinelli. He insensibly grows better, and recovers his health entirely.

A STRONG report that they are fitting out at Conftantinople a fleet of 20 fultana's, 40 gallies, and a great number of little vessels, and that all these preparations are designed against Malta. The council, not to be taken unprovided, desire succours of the pope, who immediately dispatches a tartan laden with powder, and other provisions necessary to sustain a siege, with 150 foldiers, and a promise to send a more considerable reinforcement as soon as possible. The commander d'Alegre is sent to the king of France; the commander de Sannazar to Leghorn; and the commander de Monteclair to Genoa. They all came back with confiderable forces, and landed at Malta with a grea number of knights who crowded from all parts to contribute to the defence of the order. They name the general officers; they divide the foldiers into feveral bodies, and muster near 10,000 men, all of them refolved to make a gallant defence.

mander

AFTER all, the mighty armament of Constantinople, which had made to much noise, proves to be no more than five fultana's, which go to join three other ships that came out of the ports of Tunis and Tripoli. They are apprehensive of a descent on the isle of Goza; they transport every thing thisher that is necessary to defend it; and Tancred grand prior of Messina, notwithstanding his great age and infirmities, obtains the grand master's leave to go over thither. He consults with the commander de Langon lieutenant-general, and the commander de Montfort governor of the island, about repairing the fortifications, and puts it in a good posture of defence. But the enemy, despairing perhaps of fucceeding in case they should attempt to attack it, only burnt a few little veffels which they found upon the coast, and sailed back to the Levant.

THE grand master makes considerable additions to the magazines which his predeceffor had built, and by that means improves commerce, and brings plenty into his dominions.

UPON the news that four fultana's were put to fea with a brigantine in order to make a descent in Calabria, the grand master sends out the commander de Florigny with a squadron. After some days sail they fpy a large ship, which they know to be the admiral of Tripoli, commanded by the famous corfair Baffa-Ali-Antulla-Ogli-Stamboli. He had 600 men on board, with 56 guns and 40 patterero's, and was attended by a tartan of 12 guns, 30 patterero's, and 200 men, commanded by Mahmut Ogli Caidagli, who was refolved, notwithstanding the orders of his general to the contrary, to stand the attack of the squadron. The commander de Langon who was captain of the St.

lames

James, began the engagement with his cannon; the enemy's fails took fire, and both ships were in a slame. The Turks, despairing to quench it, plunge into the sea; the knights send out their long boat to their succour, and saved 400 of them, among whom was the rais of the admiral of Tripoli, and 50 Christian slaves whom they set at liberty. The chevalier Pagani de Nocera and sive men on board the St. John were lost.

THE grand matter fends for corn to the Levant, and by that means provides against a dearth in 1710. Malta, whither the vices of Sicily had refused for above a year to allow any corn to be exported as usual.

The commander de Langon fails with the fquadron of ships towards the coast of Barbary. He meets the admiral of Algiers with 500 men on board, and takes it after a long engagement, in which all the enemy's officers were killed. This victory was fatal to the order by the death of the commander, whose valour and admirable qualities occasioned his being greatly regretted. His body was carried to Carthagena, and buried under the great altar of the cathedral. The grand master, to immortalize his memory, ordered a tomb-stone to be erected in the nave of the church of St. John, on which the following epitaph was engraved.

D. O. M.

"FRATRI Josepho de Langon Alverno, cujus virtutem, in ipso tyrocinii flore maturam, Gallicæ naves fecere, Thraces sensere, Melitenses habuere victricem. Oranum dira obsidione cinctum, cum unica religionis navi, cui præerat, onerariam ducens, penetrata Algerii classe, ejusque rege teste vel invito, militem & commeatum invexit. Generalis classium præsectus ad tripolitanorum prætoriam incendendam plurimo momento suit. Laudes tamen consilio & fortitudine sibi ubique coemptas in alias continuo transtulit. Supremà tandem Algerii nave subactà, acceptoque inde vulnere acerbo, victor sato cessit,

" die 18 Aprilis 1710, æt. 41. E. M. M. F. D. R. de Perellos-Roccaful ad benemerentiæ argumentum, mortuo, hoc mærens politum voluit Cenotaphium, ad memoriæ perennitatem."

ATTEMPT of the inquisitor of Malta upon the infirmary of the order. The tribunal of the inquisition had been introduced into the island by pope Gregory XIII. but with fo much tenderne's and caution, that they were scarce sensible of it. The bishop of Malta was the first person invested with this commission Some time after, they put in an officer of the court of Rome, but enjoined him not to do any thing without the concurrence of the grand master, the bishop, the prior of the church, and the vice-chancellor; and he was expressly restrained from taking cognizance of any crime but that of herefy. They did not at that time think of opposing an authority, the exercise of which was lodged in the first persons of the order, nor foresee that the inquisitors might in time " a make themselves not only independent but " insupportable to a body of knights descended of the most noble blood of Christendom, and whose or-" der is invested with a sovereign power over its sub-" jects."

Delci, who exercised the office of inquisitor in 1711, after having carried his pretensions so high, as to infish that the grand master's coach should stop when it met his, thought he ought not to suffer the infirmary of the order to continue any longer exempt from his jurisdiction. Twas the most privileged place of the order b, entrusted to the guard of some French knights who were infinitely zealors for their liberty, and subject to no authority but that of the grand hospitaller. No one else, of what quality soever, can enter it with-a Momorial prefented to Lewis XIV.

Vol. V. Q out

b The very marshal of the order cannot go into the infirmery, without leaving his staff of command at the door.

out first leaving the marks of his dignity Dec. 7. at the door. The officers of the inquisition got in by surprise, and began to make a visitation in form. The commander d'Avernes de Bocage, overseer of the infirmary, upon notice of this attempt, came in great haste to oppose it, turned them out immediately, and entered a protest of nullity against all they might have done in his absence.

THE grand mafter fends the grand prior Zondodari to Rome as embaffador of the order, to give 1712. the pope an account of the unjust pretensions of the inquisitor. The overseer of the infirmary goes himself to France to represent the case to his most Christian majesty, who writes in very warm terms to his holiness upon that subject, and engages him to disown and stop the attempts of his deputy.

BROTHER James de Noailles, embassador of the order in France, dies at Paris in the 50th year

Apr. 22. of his age. The bailiff de la Vieuville fucceeds him in that quality, who makes his entry on the 4th of December with all the ceremonies used at the entry of the embassiadors of sovereign princes.

THE commander Zondodaii, embassador extraordinary at Rome, makes fresh complaints against the inquisitor, for taking upon him the granting of patents to a great number of Maltese to exempt them from the obedience which they owed to their sovereign.

BROTHER Adrian de Langon, captain of the St.

Catharine, attacks leven Algerine vessels, puts 1713. them to slight, and takes one called the Half Moon of 40 guns, and manned with 400 men. Thirty-of 40 guns, and manned with 400 men. Thirtyfix Christian slaves are delivered on this occasion, and the order loses only seven men in the engagement.

THE poperwrites to the grand mafter to engage him to fend the gallies of the order to cruize off of the coaft of the ecclefiastical state, where the corsairs of Barbary were continually taking prizes.

THE

1) The commander de Langon chases an Algerine corsair of 56 guns and 500 men, comes up with him off of the isles d'Hieres, shoots all his masts 1714. by the board in an engagement of six hours, and sinks him when he could not prevail upon him to strike. They could save no more than two Christians and six Turks of all the crew.

* ANOTHER ship of Barbary taken, in which they made 95 slaves. Death of the bailist de la Vieuville embassador of the order in France. The bailist de Melmes fucceeds him in his polt.

THE great preparations made at Constantinople give them an alarm at Malta. The grand master writes to all the knights to be in a readiness to set out upon the suffer orders; for that purpose repairs all the fortifications, and provides all things necessary for the defence of the island.

The knights dispersed over the several parts of Europe begin to rendezvous in order to set out. Some, whose advanced age would not suffer them to undertake such a journey, remit the revenues of their commandries to the grand master, in order to their being employed in the desence of Malta; and others, though disabled from acting by their great age and infirmities, are resolved to go and affish at least with their advice.

The French knights, not excepting the novices, figualize their zeal in taking up confiderable fums on their own credit, which they lay out 1715. in buying a great quantity of arms and all kinds of ammunition. They fend this supply to Malta, and agree to follow soon after. The grand master in the mean timetakes 150,000 crowns, out of the treasury, and borrows a larger sum in his own name, employing it all in fetching from different places every thing that was necessary to make a vigorous defence: he gets a reinforcement of troops and gallies from the pope, and obtains leave to raise men in the ecclesialitical state.

WHILST all these preparations were making at Malta to oppose the enemy, an unknown person of a handtome aspect came to offer his service to the grand master in quality of an engineer. His offers were the more readily accepted as he feemed to be well skilled in fortifications. Some knights were appointed to thew him all the works, particularly those of la Valette. upon which he gave them several good hints, and a great idea of his capacity. Two days after he was flown, and whatever fearch was made after him, they could never find him. They made no question but he was a fpy fent by the Turks to observe the condition of the island. This adventure made the grand master think of lending some person on whom he could depend to Constantinople, in order to get a more perfect account of the grand seignior's designs. Andrew Veran, of the town of Arles, who had lived a long time at Malta, offered himself for this commission, and accordingly fet out with a vessel laden with merchandize under pretence of trading in the Levant. He first landed at Napoli di Romania the capital of the Morea, where he met with the captain-general of the republic of Venice. He learned from him, that the Turkish armament was increasing every day, but that it seemed to be defigned only against the Venetians. Sailing from thence to the Dardanelles, he was informed that the infidels. had declared war against the state of Venice. He arrived at Constantinople where he saw the count des Alleurs the French embaffador, who took him under his protection, and gave him an exact account of all the defigns of the porte.

In the mean time the knights were arriving at Malta from all quarters, none of them failing to bring some succour along with them. They fitted out a naval force, and the squadron of the order joined that of the pope, that they might be enabled to meet the Ottoman sleet. Veran returned back to Malta; and, by the account he gave of the motions of the Turkish army, they sound that either the grand seignior had no design upon that island, or, which was more probable, that he had altered his measures upon the advice he had received of the good condition it was put in by the grand mafter's care, and the vast resort of knights thither from all parts.

THE republic of Venice defires faccours from the grand mafter against the Turks. The order

fends them five men of war and fome gallies, 171 which give chace to three cordins of Barbary, and take one of 5.4 guns with 500 men on board: they bring it to Malta with four faicks laden with all forts of provisions.

DISPUTES between the commanding officers of the auxiliary fquadrons. The pope puts an end to them by giving the commodore of the Maltele fquadron the title of his lieutenant-general.

THE squadron of the order takes several Turkish ships laden with merchandize, and carries them to Corfu, where the chevalier de Langon, who commanded the pope's squadron, gains several advantages over the infidels.

THE ships of the order, with a reinforcement of two frigates and some light vessels, put to sea again to join the allies. A Maltese privateer 1717. Sinks a large Turkish ship and saves part of the crew.

A SEA engagement between the auxiliary troops and the Turks near the ifle of Stags. The infidels, whose ships suffered a great deal, fly away after having cannonaded one another for two hours together. The auxiliary troops came off without loss. The bailist de Bellesontaine, who commanded the sleet, signalized himfels in an extraordinary manner all this campaign, and was received at his return by the grand master with the highest marks of distinction.

THE squad on puts to sea again, reinsorced with the St. John man of war of 70 guns, and goes to join the Venetian sleet. The Turks grow 1718. less eager to carry on the war, and the Christian armada finds few opportunities of signalizing it self this campaign.

THE pope gives the cross of Malta to the king of Poland's natural son. The squadron of the 1719. order make a considerable prize in the Archipelago, where they take two gallies richly laden from Constantinople, on one of which the basha of Romelia with all his family was going to Napoli di Romania.

The chevalier Fraguier, first ensign of the grand master's company of guards, brings his most Christian majesty a present of birds of prey, a present which the grand masters are used to make to the king of France.

The chevalier d'Orleans takes the oaths before the king for the grand priory of France, which 720. was yacant upon the voluntary refignation of the grand prior de Vendôme.

THE grand master Raimond Perellos de Rocasul, being worn out with his great age, and a fit of fickness, which had been upon him upwards of a year, dies after a reign of 22 years. He distinguished himself by his liberality to such families as had been ruined by the insidels; made confiderable improvements in the fortifications of the island, and omitted nothing he thought might any way contribute to support the lustre and glory of his order.

THE electors being affembled with the usual ceremonies, chuse the bailiff Marc AnMarc AnTonio Zondodari for their grand master. He was a native of Sienna, and highly worthy of the mastership on account of his personal merit and his illustrious birth. The rejoicings made on this occasion are heightened by the taking of two large corfairs of Barbary, which were brought at the same time into the harbour. This success is soon after followed by the taking of the admiral of Algiers, a ship of 30 guns, and 500 men on board.

THE bailiff Ruffo is made general of the gallies of the order. The grand master obtains a brief from the pope, to oblige all such knights as had upwards of 300 l. annual income, to maintain every one a foldier at his own expence for the fecurity of the ifland; but it does not appear that this brief was ever put in execution.

THE fquadron which the grand mafter had granted the king of Spain to guard his coasts, puts to sea under the command of the bailiff de Langon, and chases a galliot of Barbary that was cruifing off of the coast of Sardinia. They cannot come up with her, but take a pink which she had made a prize of a little before. The St. John man of war, of which the commodore was on board, meets, fome days afterwards, with an Algerine veffel of 40 guns, comes up with her, and takes her after an hour's engagement. Twenty Christian slaves were delivered, and 260 infidels made flaves. A few days after, they meet the squadron of Tunis, confisting of the admiral, the Patrone, and the Porcupine. The two first get off in the night, after a long and smart engagement; but the Porcupine was forced to strike, after having stood it out against all the five till ten at night. They deliver thirty-two Christians, who were flaves in this ship. This fuccess, which was owing to the valour of captain Algonis de la Grois, casts such a terror over all the coast of Barbary, that no corfair dares stir out to cruise.

Don Carlo Conti, prince of Poli, nephew to the pope, receives the cross of the order from the hands of cardinal Pamphileo, grand prior of Rome.

1722.

The grand master, who had been attacked for upwards of six months with a kind of gangrene in his bowels, dies on the 16th of June, at the age of 63 years 7 months and 15 days. This prince, who was highly estimable for his singular piety, took great care to fortify the island, was exceeding charitable, maintained a regularity of discipline in his order, as much by his example as his authority, and wanted nothing but a longer reign to answer in every respect the great hopes conceived of him.

Bro-

BROTHER don Raimond d'Espong, bailist of Negropont, lieutenant of the mastership, calls the council together; and, after the usual ceremonies, the elec-

D'ANTHONY EMA-NUEL DE VILHE-NA. tors agreed unanimously in the choice of d'Anthony Emanuel de Vilhena, a Portuguese, of the language of Castile, to be their grand master. His birth, his personal virtues, and his perfect knowledge of the rules and maxims of the order, made him truly worthy of this promotion. He had passed through all the dignities of the order, and distinguished himself in them all. He had hardly finished his caravans when he was made captain of the admiral galley, and was wounded in an engagement with two Tripoli ships, which general Antonio Correa de Sousa took in 1680. Four years after he was made captain of one of the men of war, which the order fent to affift the Venetians in the conquest of the Morea. They made him succesfively major, and then colonel of the country militia. In 1602 he had the command of the 8th galley, and the year following that of the St. Anthony. He was made great cross of grace in 1696, commissary of the navy two years afterwards, and commissary of war in 1701. The dignity of great chancellor of the order was conferred upon him in 1713. He quitted it three years after to take that of bailiff d'Acre; was chose one of the 21 electors for the election of the grand master Zondodari, and the same year was made procurator of the treasury. These several posts, in all of which he behaved himself to the infinite satisfaction of the order in general, were so many steps to raise him to the mastership.

The new grand mafter's first care was to put the island in a state of defence against the invasion with which the Turks still threatened it. He built fort Emmanuel on the little isle of Marsa-mousset, which the insidels might have easily seized on, and would thereby have greatly facilitated their success. He likeways ordered

ANTH. EMANUEL DE VILHENA Grand Master. 199

ordered all such knights as were 19 years of age to repair to him.

THE grand seignior's great preparations against the order were made at the instance of a flave, called Hali. whom Mahomet Effendi, his embaffador in France, had redeemed as he passed by Malta. This slave, who was beloved by the knights, and in favour with the grand mafter, had ferved in the navy, and had been for ten years iman or chief of the Turkilli flaves that were at Malta. Upon his return to Constantinople, he gave the ministers of the porte an account of the forces of the order, and perfuaded them that it would be an easy matter to surprise the island, by the help of those flaves, who were ever prepared for a revolt, and were more in number than the inhabitants: that in order to fucceed in their attempt, they needed only fit out a fquadron of ten ships, and appear with it before Malta, where the flaves would infallibly take arms, and their infurrection crown them with fuccefs.

The project pleased the grand vizier. Accordingly commodore Abdi Capitan put to sea with ten ships: Hali embarked likeways with a captain's commission, when they came and presented themselves before Malta. But the wise precautions the grand master had taken rendered the executing of their design impracticable. They retired after a few broadsides, and Abdi Capitan sent the grand master the following letter:

"The first man of the isle of Malta, the heads of his council, and chiefs of the languages of France, of Venice, and other nations that adore the Messias, are advertised by this letter, that we have been expressly sent by the grand seignior, the master of the universe, and refuge of the world, to order them to deliver up to us all such slaves as are under their miserable government, that they may be presented before his supreme and august throne. This is his pleasure, and his design in sending us with this squadron. If you sail to obey, dreadful punishments will make you repent your fault. Send your answer to Tunis."

THIS stile, so agreeable to the pride of the grand scignior's officers, did not however hinder the grand malter from answering the letter, in hopes that it might be of use in procuring the deliverance of some Christian slaves. The tenor of his letter, which was wrote with politeness and dignity, was as follows: "That the defign of his order was not to fcour the feas in the view only of making flaves, but to cruife " with their ships for securing the liberty of the seas to all Christian vessels; that they attacked such only as disturbed commerce, and who deserved to be made 64 flaves for endeavouring to make the Christians so: that they had nothing fo much at heart as the deli-" very of such of theirs as were in slavery, and that if " his highness was in the same disposition, they were ready to enter into a treaty for restoring the slaves on both fides to their liberty, either by way of exchange or ranfom, as was generally practifed among princes; and that if his highness would let them "know his intentions, they should not be wanting " on their part to fecond them."

THIS answer was directed to the marquis of Bonac, the French embassador at Constantinople, with 1723. a defire that he would deliver it to any minifler of the porte whom he should judge proper.

The French embassador, judging, by the contents of the letter, and the delicacy with which it was wrote.

The French embassador, judging, by the contents of the letter, and the delicacy with which it was wrote, that the grand master's design was not so much to answer the commodore of a squadron, as to communicate his intentions to the grand seignior himself by his first minister, sent it to the grand visier. Some days after he spoke to him about it, and was agreeably surprised to find him disposed not only to make an exchange of slaves, but to enter into a treaty of peace with the order of Malta. The marquis of Bonac, persuaded that such a peace would be of great advantage to all Christendom in general, as well as to the order in particular, laboured at it with great application, and prevailed so far with the grand vizier, whom he had wrought upon by his probity and fincerity, more than by the superiority of his genius, that all the articles which he proposed were agreed to. This being done, he sent them to the grand master, and wrote to the court of France, upon the same subject, which, after a mature examination, sent him orders to continue his endearours to bring the affair to a happy conclusion.

F12

ANTH. EMANUEL DE VILHENA Grand Mafter. 201

THE grand mafter had the proposals of the porte examined, and sent his observations on them to M. de Bonac. They chose rather to make a limited truce than a peace; they took all the necessary precautions to keep the order from all manner of stain or reproach, and the grand vizier agreed to every thing. The articles stipulated between them were,

1. THAT the flaves should be exchanged on both sides, and that if there should be more on one side than on the other, the supernumerary ones should be delivered at the rate of 100 pieces of eight per head.

2. THAT this exchange should extend no further than to such slaves only as had been taken by the ships of the Maltese and the grand seignior.

3. That the truce should continue for 20 years, at the expiration of which time, they might treat for another.

4. That the republics of Africa should not be comprehended in the treaty, and that the porte should not give them any succour, either directly or indirectly, against Malta.

5. THAT the Maltese should have the same privileges as the French in all the grand seignior's dominions.

6. That the treaty should be null, whenever any

Christian prince should be at war with the porte.

The news of this treaty was received at Constantinople with great applause. But the captain basha, refenting that an affair which related to the sea should be treated without first consulting him, engaged all the sea officers to oppose it. They carried their point so far as to make the grand vizier change his note, who, feeing their universal discontent, did not care to carry the negotiation further. However, he told the marquis of Bonac, that he had not changed his views, and that it would be an easy matter to bring that affair on foot again, by only taking certain measures to gain the consent of the sea officers, whose own interest would infallibly oblige them to give into the scheme.

feeing

DURING this negotiation, the account of which I though, it would not be proper to interrupt, the grand master, upon advice that a Tunis man of war was cruising in company with a tartan, between the ifles of Miritimo and Panteleria, and had taken two barks, viz. one of Sicily, and the other of Genoa, fent the St. John man of war, and a frigate, to look out for them. They meet the corfairs, who purfue them for fome time to reconnoitre them, but afterwards think fit to stand off, and endeavour to get from them. The Maltele frigate comes up with the ship; and, after exchanging broadlides for four hours together, forces it to strike. This ship was an excellent sailer, and had been given by the grand seignior to the bay of Tripoli, who had made her his patronne. She was mounted with 48 guns, and 14 brass pattereroes, with 400 men on board, of which no more than 267 Turks survived. Three and thirty Christian slaves recover their liberty on this occasion. This important victory was owing to the valour of the chevalier de Chambray who commanded the frigate. The St. John man of war purfued the tartan and took it, and both the prizes were brought to Malta.

POPE benedict XIII. is defirous of giving the grand mafter and the order of Malta a diftinguishing mark of his affection. He dispatches a gentleman of his bed-chamber to Malta, to present that prince with a long rapier, and a helmet which he had consecrated crated at Christmas with great solemnity. The present is received with all possible acknowledgements by the grand master, who considers it as a new motive to signalize himself more and more in the practice of all the virtues which have so justly gained him the respect of his brother knights, the friendship of the princes of Europe, and the paternal tenderness of his holiness.

^{*} The rapier is a filver fword gilt, about five foot long. The helmet is a kind of cap of pur-le velvet, embroidered with gold, and embellished with an holy ghost of pearls.

ANTH. EMANUEL DE VILHENA Grand Master. 203

VOL. V.

DISSERTATION

UPON THE

Ancient and Modern GOVERNMENT

OFTHE

Religious and Military ORDER

OF

St. JOHN of JERUSALEM.

HOUGH an liftory of this order ought naturally to give an account of the first constitutions, statutes, and original form of its government, yet a series of time, and a variety of conjunctures, have insensibly occasioned changes therein, which are unavoidable in the condition of human nature; and it would betray a gross ignorance of the inconstancy and weakness of mankind, to offer to judge of the present constitution of a state by its ancient customs, and the practice of the first ages after its establishment.

This confideration determined me, for the entire fatisfaction of the reader, to annex, at the end of this work, a particular discourse upon the present state of the order of Malta. I shall first treat of the several classes into which the order is divided. My next enquiry shall be into the proofs of noble desent that are required in order to be admitted into the first class. Afterwards shall follow a particular account of the nature of the commandries, and the qualities requifite to be intitled to them. From thence I shall pais to the dignities which give a right of fitting either in the general chapter, or in the council, and thall add, at the cud of this article, a lift of the principal offices of the order, and of the persons that have the right of nomination to them: and this treatite will conclude with the form observed in the election of the grand master, a dignity of a fingular nature, which, wholoever is inveited with enjoys an entire fovereigniay, and all the rovalties of a prince over the fecular inhabitants at the fame time that, with regard to the knight, he is confidered only as the head and aperior of a religious and military republic.

DISSERTATION upon the GOVERNMENT, &c. 205

THE church has in its bosom various orders of religious, who, without exerciting the fame functions, have all of them their particular medit in the fight of God, and who, by their variety, contribute, each in his respective way, to the ornament and beauty of the church. Some sequestring themselves volumarily from the convertation of mankind, buried as it were in folitude, and wrapped up in their own virtue, fpend their days in the contemplation of eternal truths. Others more converfaut in the world apply themselves chiefly to the instruction of their neighbour, and contribute to the eafing the care of paitors, when called into their affistance in the ecclehatical ministry. There are some fo enflamed with zeal for the conversion of insidels, that they go to the fartheil parts of the earth to preach the gospel. The same zeal, but acted by a charity of another kind, made a body of gentry, some ages ago, take up arms to preserve the Christians from being made flaves by the Mahemetans and infidels; and it is of the form of government of this last kind of religious, whose history I have just concluded, that I am going to give an account of in this place.

AR.

ARTICLE I.

Of the several classes of religious in the order of St. John.

H E hospitallers, considered merely as religious, are divided into three classes, all of them different from one another, with respect to birth, and rank, and functions. The first class consists of those whom they call knights of justice, i. e. as the formulary of their profession expresses it, such, the ancient nobility of whose descent merits their being admitted to that degree of honour; and none but these are qualified to be advanced to the dignities of bailiffs and priors, whom they call grand croffes, or to that of grand mafter. Time, which is too frequently the author of abuses and irregularities, has introduced a practice of admitting other persons into the rank of knights of justice, who are not qualified like them, and who are called knightsof grace; they being fuch as being descended of fathers of noble extraction, but of mothers of ignoble or plebeian birth, have endeavoured to throw a veil over this notorious defect by a papal dispensation.

The fecond class comprehends the religious who are chaplains, and belonging in that capacity to the metropolitan church of St. John, where they perform divine fervice. Out of this body they generally take their chaplains, both for the great hospital of Malta, and for the ships and gallies of the order; and they exercise the same function in the grand master's chaexercise the same function in the grand matter's chapel. Notwithstanding that, in all the states of Christendom, the clergy have the first rank, on account of the dignity of their ministry, nevertheless the knights, though but mere laymen, take place of the priests, and have all the authority in their hands; "quia omnis "potestas residet in primatibus." We do not find any instance of the like government, but among the brothers of the charity, another order of hospitallers, where the religious, who are priests and ministers at the altar, are so far from having any share in the government, that they are entirely dependent on superiors who are meer laymen.

the

WHAT they call the third class comprehends the ferving brothers of arms, a body of religious, who, without being either priefts or knights, are nevertheless obliged, whether they are in the field, or in the infirmary, to ferve under the orders of the knights, and, like them, make four caravans of fix months each on board the ships of the order. This body of half knights, if we may give them that name, was formerly very numerous and confiderable, and did great fervices to the order. There were likeways of old a certain number of commandries defigned for them, which the chaplains and the ferving brothers of arms still enjoy in common at this day, they falling either to the one or the other according to their feniority, But for some years past, the number of serving brothers of arms is very much leffened, and a decree has been made to fulpend the admitting of any more till further orders.

I PASS over the priests of obedience, who, without being obliged ever to go to Malta, receive the religious habit, make their vows in form, and are afterwards fixed in the particular service of some church of the order, under the authority of a grand prior, or a commander. There are still at Malta some serving brothers de stage, a kind of vassals employed in the meanest offices of the convent and hospitals; details of so little consequence that I do not think it proper to trouble the reader with them. But this account would be imperfect if I did not speak of the religious dames of this order, of which there are feveral nunneries in France, Italy, and Spain. These nuns, before they can be received, are obliged to give the same proofs of their noble descent as the knights of justice : there are even fome famous numeries. as that of Sixene in Arragon, and Dalgoveira in Catalonia, in which the proofs of R 3 gentiligentility,² which would be allowed of for the reception of a knight, would not yet be sufficient for a num of the choir; and in those two houses they insist on such a purity and antiquity of gentility in a lady who offers herself, that it exceeds the degrees which the statutes require for the reception of the knights of justice.

ARTICLE II.

Of the reception of the brother knights.

TF we take the word chevalerie or chivalry, in the general notion that first presents itself, it is a profesfion of ferving on horseback in war, which, among most nations, has been always a mark of gentility, to diffinguish persons of a noble extraction from those of a plebeian birth. The quality of chevalier or knight was in the middle age confined to fuch noble persons, as either before or after an engagement, had deserved to receive the order of chivalry ot knighthood from their general, as a testimony and recompence of their valour: and it was generally conferred in the field, by the general's giving them a kiss, and girding a sword about them. But this honourable distinction was never granted but to martial men, descended from antient knights, and of a military extraction, "ad militarem " honorem," fays the emperor Frederic II. " nullus ac-" cedat, qui non fit de genere militum." Here are two kinds of knighthood, the one entirely of descent, " genus militare;" the other meerly perfoual, "militaris "honos." Theodore Hæping speaks of this latter knighthood, which is to be acquired only by a man's own valour, when he fays, that no body is born a knight: " pemo eques nascitur, sed per habentem potestatem " soità sub formula." So Peter de la Vigne, in his life of the emperor Frederic, above mentioned, fays

* N. B. The word gentility, which is made use of in several places in the translation, it, in the original, not lesse or nobility.

expressly, "licet generis nobilitas in posteros deri"vetur, non tamen equestris dignitas." To prevent confounding these two kinds of knighthood, the one which a man derives meerly from his ancestors, and the other, which he acquires only by his own warlike exploits, some historians of the middle age have employed the term (milites) to signify knights who were ancestors of the person they speak of, and use that of (eques) only to distinguish the person who actually has received the order of knighthood.

THE knights of St. John of Jerusalem, in their military institution, kept strictly to this usage. All the remains we have in France, and in the registers of the priories of the three languages of this nation, of the names of the old knights of that order, shew plainly that they were all descended from warlike ancestors and gentlemen both by name and the arms they bore. But as in process of time different customs arose, and that every nation fancied they had a right to determine, and even extend the nature of gentility, as well as fix the proofs of it, the chief magistracies, and several civil officers, have obtained in France and Italy the same advantages as a gentility wholly military, to that in those two nations they actually receive persons for knights who would be refused in Germany. This obliges me to enter into a detail of the different proofs which are required in most of the languages to shew the nobility of all fuch presentees as offer themselves to be admitted into the order in quality of knights of justice: and as the kingdom of France alone comprehends three languages2, and consequently furnishes more knights than any other country, I shall give a short account of the different rules which they have observed at differtimes in the reception of the knights.

If we may give credit to persons who are well skilled in heraldry, the use of coats of arms is derived from the crusades. So many crosses of disferent figures, as we see in the escutcheons of the ancient gentry are a sufficient proof of this fact: and the colours, the cnamels,

à Provence, Auvergne, France.

mels, the vaire, and the contrevaire that we meet there, owe their original to the furs which those warriors used for an ornament to their coats of arms. The generality of them went to the holy land on purpole to receive the order of knighthood; and they thought themfelves more than recompensed for the perils and fatigues of so long a voyage, if in any battle fought against the infidels, they had but received the kifs from a prince or general and been dubbed a knight. The military order, whose history I have been writing, was founded upon the same principle, and formed upon the same model. They admitted none for knights but such as before their entrance into the order, had either themfelves been graced with that title, or who were at leaft descended of ancient knights: so that we may look upon this part of the order of St. John, as a crufade compoled entirely of gentry. Anciently Jerulalem and the holy land were the only places where they received all such knights as dedicated themselves to this holy order of knighthood. We find, that gentlemen fent their fons thither very young to be brought up in the head convent of the order, in hopes that they would be there formed alike for piety, and the art of war; but they never received these young gentlemen, unless they brought with them an authentic testimony of their noble extraction, attested by the priors of the country where they were born: and before their fetting out, thefe priors were likewise to give them letters of recommend. ation, and a promise that they should receive the habits of the order, and be admitted to make their vows, as foon as ever they came to the statutable age for being made knights, which among the feculars was settled at the twentieth year. "Nullus" says a statute of the order made in 1144, " ex hospitali miles " fieri requirat, niti, an equam habitum religionis al-" sumeret, extiterit ei promissum: et tunc quando in " illa erit constitutus ætate, in qua sæcularis officia " miles possit sieri : nihilominus tamen silii nobilium in " domo hospitali nutriti, cum ad ætatem militarem

66 per-

" pervenerint de voluntate magistri & præceptoris,
" & de confilio fratrum poterunt militia infigniri."

WE have already observed, that the young knights were at first received in no other place but at the head convent of the order; but the recruits they wanted to fupply the place of fuch as were continually losing their lives in fighting against the insidels, obliged the chapters and supreme councils of the order to consent, that they might, after the proofs of their gentility had been examined, give the habit to novices in the grand priories on this fide the fea; and as the ill practice of contracting unequal marriages with women of mean birth and condition, had not yet crept into noble families, all the attestations of the gentility of the presentee went no farther than the mentioning his father and mother's name, who were justly supposed to be descended of gentlemen by name as well as arms. A proof of this may be seen in the list that will be given at the end of this discourse, when it will appear, that in 1355, the date where the oldest registers of the grand priory of France begin, they never received any body but gentlemen whole names and families were known, and even distinguished in their feveral provinces.

BUT this very gentry, which till that time had preferved itself unfullied, being reduced to narrow circumstances by expences that are unavoidable in war, was foon forced for their support, to proflitute as it were their noble blood by contracting marriages below them: and lords and gentlemen by name as well as arms, began to debase themselves in marrying rich plebeians. The fear, lest these unequal matches should bring the order in contempt by the reception of knights descendof them, engaged the whole body to make a regulation, requiring that an authentic instrument should be drawn up in writing with legal proofs, to shew the legitimacy and descent of the person presented; and the like proofs were to be produced with respect to his father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, great grandfather and great grand mother, for upwards of an hundred years, with a blazon of these eight quarters annexed

annexed to the instrument; and the person presented, was likewise to prove that his great grandfathers had been generally reputed gentlemen of name as well as arms. This last article of the statute is still in force at this day, or is at least kept up in the form of the instrument. But the proof of this last qualification required with respect to the great grandfathers does not seem to be very easy to be given in France, by knights who have no other from whence they can derive their gentility, but a perty fecretary of the king's a, a gentleman of the town-hall, a mayor or alderman of iome of those towns which entitle their magistrates to the rank of gentlemen: and I cannot pellibly comprehend how a man, who has no other fource of his gentility but one of thele offices, which after all convey it no lower than a grandion, can be employed in a genealogy in the proofs of a great grandfather as if he was a gentleman by name as well as aims; how he can pais for a gentleman of ancient race who stopped by dint of money only the plebeian blood that was creeping in his veins, and who was never feen to draw his fword in the fervice of his country. Nor is it less difficult to account for, how the quality required in a grand father of being a gentleman by name as well as arms, can fometimes be applied to a tradefinan who is ennobled by an office in the law, without giving an unnatural and forced interpretation to that title, and it is very extraordinary to pretend, that a magistrate's robe ought to be put upon the same level with a warrior's coat of arms, and to annex the privileges of true nobility to that robe.

However, notwithstanding this difficulty, which after all arites only from an unwillingness to alter any thing in the old stile of the statutes, we must needs own that they are very exact and strict with respect to the proofs which they require of gentility for the eight quarters of the presente. These proofs must be testimonial, literal, local and secret, which it will be proper for us to explain in a more particular manner.

The first proof is called testimonial, because it arises from the testimony of four perions of noble extraction, who ought to be gentlemen of name as well as arms. The commissioners, who are generally old commanders, make them take a foleran oath to speak the truth, and likewise interrogate them separately. If there be any thing that can make this kind of proof suspected it is, that in France, the person presented, or his relations, generally provide these witnesses.

THE fecond proof is called literal, because it is taken from writings, deeds, contracts, acknowledgements of tenures, and furveys which the person presented produces: upon which it may be proper to observe, that though marriage, writings, and wills are necessary to a full proof of the deicent and statutableness of the person presented, yet these kind of writings are not sufcient to prove his gentility, by reason of the opportunity notaries have of furnishing the parties contracting with any titles and qualities which they please to beflow on themselves, without ever examining whether they are really due to them or not. But in defect of these writings, which amount to no more than a bare declaration, without any legal proof, they have recourse to the partition of lands of a noble tenure, to deeds of guardianship, to grants of the wardship of lands held in capite, to acts or fealty and homage, to acknowledgements of vallaiage and furveys, to commissions, warrants, and grants of posts and dignities that either imply gentility, or entitle a man to it, to fummons for attending the king in the field, and laftly, to monuments, epitaphs, coats of arms, glais-windows, and ancient eleutcheons in churches.

The third proof is called local, because the commissioners are obliged to go to the very place of the person's nativity, and when they are desirous of being exact, they ought to go likewise into the country from whence this family came originally, and to the very place whence these his ancestors came who he presents were gentlemen by name as well as arms; or, if this place is very remote, and lies in another privey, to fend to the prior of that district to make the enquiries, and take the examinations necessary in this case.

Rod

THE fourth kind of proof is derived from a secret enquiry, which the commissioners make unknown to the person presented. They do not insist, that the witnesses should be gentlemen like the four first; in this choice, regard is only had to their probity. When these four kinds of proofs appear to be substantial, and confiftent with one another, the commissioners draw up an instrument in form containing an account of them. which is carried to the chapter of the priory; from thence it passes into the hands of two new commissioners, who examine whether all the rules prescribed by the statutes have been exactly observed in these informations; and when it appears that nothing has been omitted, this instrument with its proofs, and the blazon of the eight quarters, is fent to Malta, from whence there comes a warrant to give the habit of the order to the presentee. We have already observed, that with regard to the three languages of the kingdom of France, viz. Provence, Auvergne, and France, the statutes and the present practice require that the presentee prove his great grandfathers by the father and mother'sfide were gentlemen by name as well as arms; which forms, as was before observed, the eight quarters of gentility.

In the language of Italy they are obliged to produce no more than four quarters: but every one of these, viz. that of the father and mother, and that of the grand mother by the father and mother's side, must have a known gentility of 200 years, and it must be proved that every one of these four families have had the quality of gentlemen for 200 years past. In like manner they require only the blazon and the arms of these four families, without going, as they do in France, so far upwards as the great grandmother. We must likewise observe with regard to the language of Italy, that in the commonwealths of Genoa and Lucca, and the grand duke's territories, traffic, and the trade of banking, are not any way derogatory to a person as in the other priories of the fam language, and in all the other languages of the order. We are told that they are not a jot more scrupulous upon this article at Rome and all over the pope's dominions, than they are at Genoa and Florence; upon which the following reslection may very well be made, viz. that this is making knights of a very base allay. WITH regard to the languages of Arragon and Caftile, the candidate is first to present the names of his four quarters, i. e. of his father and mother, and his grandmothers both by the father and mother's side, and to express in his petition the places from whence these four families originally came: whereupon the chapter of the priory to which he applies himself dispatch some commissioners secretly to go upon the spot, and inform themselves whether these families are reputed noble, and whether they do not defcend orginally from Jewish or Mahometan ancestors. If the report of these secret commissioners is favourable to the presentee, they appoint others to take authentic informations from the lords and persons of the greatest quality in each quarter: and these commissioners usually take all care possible to surprite such as they have a mind to interrogate, that they may not be prepared before-hand. The depositions of these lords and gentlemen are judged to be fufficient, and they do not infift on writings or fettlements as in France. So that all the proof of gentility in the provinces of Spain, consists in informations and interrogatories with respect to the four quarters. They however do not fail to visit the churches where there are any monuments, epitaphs, or other marks of honour of the ancestors of the presentee, and to examine whether their coats of arms are the same with his. For befides the authentic proof which they infift on of the religion and gentility of the presentee from the fourth generation, he is obliged to present on a sheet of paper an elcutcheon bearing quarterly the arms of the four families which he produces of the proof of his gentility.

other

WITH regard to Portugal, which makes part of the language of Castile, they have no occasion to take the fecret and preliminary informations concerning the quality of the families of the four quarters; because, by virtue of an old custom established by the kings of that nation, the names of all the noble families of the kingdom are carefully preferved in public registers; and if the four quarters from which the candidate pretends to be descended are not inserted in them, they never proceed to the public information.

THERE is not in the whole order of Malta any language or nation where the proofs are more rigorous, or made with greater exactness than in Germany. In this the natural fons and baltards of fovereign princes are not admitted to be knights of justice, as is practifed in the other languages. The legitimate children also of chief magistrates, though their families have been always reputed noble, are in like manner excluded, bebecause their gentility is deemed to be a civil gentility. and for that reason unqualified to enter into a body where they admit only a military gentility by name as well as arms: and the custom of the language of Germany is to infift on proofs of fixteen quarters before any knight can be received, and the very same proofs which they require in the noble collegiate bodies of that nation. The gentlemen that depose as witnesses affert upon oath, that these sixteen quarters are very noble; that the genealogy which the candidate has given in is a faithful one, and proved by authentic writings, and that all the quarters produced are of families already received in the affemblies of the circles, and qualified to be admitted into all the noble. collegiate bodies. The blood from which a man must be descended, ought to run in a very pure stream, and all the alliances of it must be very noble, otherways there is no making proof of these fixteen quarters. And, at the same time, they are so very rigid in this language, that they would not let a fingle quarter pass that had been refused in any collegiate body: which has given occafion to a faying, viz. that if a fon of the grand feignior's fe

En

20

Ġ

was to be converted, and defire to be received as a knight in the language of Germany, he could not be admitted in it, as well for want of legitimacy, as for the difficulty he would have to prove lixteen quarters on the woman's fide.

When a knight hath made all his proofs, he may be received at three different ages. He is received as of age at fixteen, though he is not obliged to go to Malta till he is twenty, and he pays about 260 crowns of gold, worth about an hundred pence each, for his passage fees. Secondly, they may enter themselves as pages to the grand master, and are received as such at twelve years of age, and quit it at sisteen: the passage fees for a young page are almost the same as those which are paid when a person is received of age. In sine, within these hundred years they have made knights of minority, children in their very cradles; a very modern practice, which the passion of parents for the advancement of their children has rendered very common: the occasion of it shall be related in few words.

WHEN the order was in possession of the isle of Rhodes, there was, in the city of that name, a place called the Collachium, or the Cloister, a quarter set apart for the lodgings of the religious only, and divided from the dwellings of the secular inhabitants. the general chapter held at Malta in 1631, it was refolved, that they should build a cloister of the same nature; a project which could not be put in execution without a fund of 100,000 crowns. As the treasury was very low, they refolved, for the fupplying of what was wanting, to grant an hundred dispensations for receiving a hundred young children into the order, upon condition that they gave a thousand crowns a piece for their passage-fees, besides some other small fees. These hundred dispensations were presently filled; but the Collachium was not built: the money arising from this scheme was employed upon other occasions, and this contrivance has been found to be so convenient, that, in default of a general chapter, they have recourse to the authority of the popes, the first superiors of the S 2 order.

order, who, by particular briefs which they iffue out, authorife this reception of minors, on condition of paying 322 piftoles and a third, at the current rate of Spanish piftoles for their passage-fees. This entrancemoney is called passage-fees, and owes its original to a sum of money which a young gentleman, who was desirous of going to take the habit at Jerusalem, or at Rhodes, formerly paid to the master that carried him thirter.

THIS is pretty near the form observed in the reception of the knights of justice, and in the proofs which are required of their gentility. As for the chaplains or conventual brothers, and the serving brothers of arms, who are not tied up to fuch kind of proofs, they are however obliged to shew that they are born of honest parents, who never were servants, or practised any vile or mechanic art; that their fathers, mothers, and grandfathers, by both father and mother's fide, as well as they themselves, were all born in lawful wedlock. These serving brothers, whether of the church or of arms, though born of parents who had no title to gentility, do nevertheless, in quality of religious, make up part of the body of the order in conjunction with the knights of justice, and are called to the grand master's election in which they have their votes. The chaplains have this further advantage, viz. that the bishop of Malta, and the prior of the church of St. John, are taken out of their body, and have the first place in council after the grand master, or, in his absence, after his lieutenant. But they are the only persons of these two last classes who have any share in the government, all the authority being lodged in the hands of the knights of justice. However, to make them some amends, they have assigned them some commandries, to which they succeed by turns, according to their rank and seniority from the time of their reception: they are likeways entertained, and have their table like the knights in the inns of their respective languages.

THERE are at Malta feven palaces, which they call inns, where all the religious, both knights and ferving brothers,

brothers, and the novices of the feven languages, as well as fuch as are actually profesfed, have their tables. The commanders, who are supposed to be rich enough to subfift on the revenues of the ircommandries, are very feldom there: every head or pillier of an inn has a confiderable apartment in it. The treasury of the order furnishes him a sum either in money, com or oil for the diet of the religious of his inn. His own particular table is served with a plenty that spreads itself over the tables about it: but with all this the religious would often make but forry cheer, if the pillier of the inn did not, out of his own purie, supply what was wanting in the allowance from the treasury. But as those who have the keeping of the inn, have a right to the first dignity that becomes vacant in their language, they all ftrive, either by thriftiness, or by borrowing of their friends, to procure wherewithal to keep house with credit. Whenever the inn becomes vacant, either by the pillier's death, or by his promotion to an higher dignity, the oldest knight of the language succeeds him. They have no regard whether he is a commander or a private knight; all they consider is only whether he be the senior knight of his language; that he owe nothing to the treasury; and in case he enjoys any of the orders estates, that he has made improvements on them, and given in his terrier, or account of their rents; that he has kept a ten year's refidence in the convent; in fine, that he, by virtue of his seniority, has demanded the vacant dignity, which, though it be burdensome, is nevertheless always courted, because it is ever a path that leads to another, which has revenues sufficient to make them an ample satisfaction for all the expence they have been at.

'TIS for the fame reason that some young knights, as soon as they have made their caravans, desire leave to fit out gallies, in hopes of getting a commandry the sooner. For though the order is always at part of the expense of such armaments, it nevertheless costs these young knights very considerable sums out of their own pockets, in the hopes they entertain of being indemnified by a commandry of courtefy, which they generally receive from the bounty of the grand maflers.

gu

For the defraying of so many different expences, as the order is obliged to be at, either for the maintenance of the knights, the support of the hospital, or the keeping up of forces by sea and land, they have funds arising from the prizes which they take from the infidels, from the passage-fees, mortuaries, and revenues of vacant dignities. A mortuary is the personal estate of a deceased knight, and if he be a commander, it takes in the revenue of the rest of the year from the time of his death to the first of May following. The profits of vacancies go likeways to the order, and continue a year longer. In fine, the most substantial revenue the order has, confifts in the responsions which they levy upon the priories, bailiwicks, and commandries: employments and dignities, each of which will now be treated of in particular.

ARTICLE III.

Of the dignities, priories, bailiwicks, and commandries appropriated to the knights of justice.

N the history preceeding this differtation, we have feen that the order is divided into eight languages, viz. Provence, Auvergne, France, Italy, Arragon, England, Germany and Castile, to each of which a particular dignity is annexed. Provence enjoys that of great commander. The marshal is always taken from that of Auvergne. The language of France has that of great hospitaller. The admiral is taken from that of Italy. The drapier, who is now stiled the great conservator, is of the language of Arragon. The turcopolier, or general of the horse, was formerly of the language of England; but since the change of religion in that kingdom, the grand master's seneschal is invested with this title. The post of grand bailist belongs to the language of Germany, and that of great chancellor to the language of Castile.

In the language of Provence there are two priories, viz. St. Giles and Toulouse, with the bailiwick of Manosque. There are 54 commandries in the priory of St. Giles, and 35 in the grand priory of Toulouse.

The language of Auvergne has but one grand priory, which bears the same name, and the bailiwick of Lyons, which was antiently called the bailiwick of Lurveul: there are 40 commandries of knights, and eight of serving brothers within this priory.

The language of France has three grand priories. The grand priory of France contains 45 commandries, that of Aquitain 65, and the grand priory of Champagne 24.

THERE is likeways in the same language, the bailiwick of the Morea, the title of which is annexed to St. John de Lateran at Paris, and the post of great treafurer united to the commandry of St. John de Corbeil.

In Italy, the grand prior of Rome has 19 commandries under him, the prior of Lombardy 45, the prior of Venice 27, the priors of Barletto and Capua have 25 together, the prior of Messina 12, the prior of Pisa 26, and the bailists of St. Euphemia, St. Stephen's of Monopoli, the Trinity of Venusia, and of St. John de Naples, are comprehended in the language of Italy.

ARRAGON, Catalonia, aud Navarre, compose the language of Arragon.

THE grand prior of Arragon, commonly called in history the Castellan of Emposta, has 29 commandries within his district, the prior of Catalonia 28, and the prior of Navarre 17: the bailiwick of Majorca is of this language, and the bailist of Caps in Africa depends likeways upon it. But this bailiwick has been lost to the order ever since the loss of Tripoli and its adjoining territory.

The language of England and Scotland, comprehended formerly the priory of England, or of St. John of London, and that of Ireland: there were in this priory 32 commandries, besides the bailiwick of l'Aigle, or of the Eagle.

THE grand prior of Germany is prince of the holy Empire, and refides at Heitershexm. He has in High as well as Low Germany, 67 commandries in his dependence, besides the priors of Bohemia and Hungary, and the bailiwick of Sonneberg, which is now in the hands of the Lutherans.

CASTILE, the kingdoms of Leon and Portugal, compose what is called the language of Castile. Under the priors of Castile and Leon are 27 commandries. and that of Portugal, called the priory of Crato, has 31, besides the bailiwick of la Bouëde. The title (in partibus) of the bailiff of Negrepont, is common to the languages of Castile and Arragon: so that there are actually near 500 commandries in the order, besides the priories and bailiwicks. The commandries, and all the estates of the order, in what country soever they live, are the property of the body of the order. Formerly they were let out to receivers and secular farmers, who paid the rent of their leafes to the common treafury: but as the city of Jerusalem, and afterwards the isle of Rhodes, lay at a great distance, these secular farmers took advantage of it, and proved very unfaithful, for which reason the management of these estates were afterwards entrusted to the grand priors in their several districts. This was at first no more than a trust and a bare administration; but they foon began to consider it as their property, and under one pretence or other, and sometimes without any at all, they consumed all revenues of the order. This male-administration obliged the general chapters, and, in their default, the council to have recourse to a new expedient : they appointed a knight of known probity and difinterestedness to superintend over each particular mannour or portion of estate which the order had in the same canton or district. But they held this administration from the council only (durante beneplacito.) The order likeways fometimes required him to take care of the education of fome young knights probationers, and there was always a brother chaplain to fay mass in this little com-They were forbidden going beyond the limits of their house, without leave first obtained from the knight who was the superior of it; and such as were found to transgress were arrested and put in prifon. This superior, in antient writings, was called Preceptor, and afterwards commander; a name which imported no more than that the education of these young knights, and the management of the possessions of the order were recommended to his care. He was impowered to take out of these revenues a portion sufficient for the sublisting of his community, and assisting the poor of his diffrict; and he was obliged to fend to the common treasury a certain sum yearly. which was always proportioned to the revenue of the commandry. This quit-rent was called a Responsion, the use of which is continued to this day: general chapters have a right of augmenting thefe responsions in times of war, and according to the wants and occasions of the order. I cannot say whether these little communities above mentioned were suppressed in order for the drawing off more confiderable responsions from the commandries, or whether afpirit of divition arifing among them, they dwindled away of themselves. That which appears more certain is, that they left the administration of a commandry to a single knight, whom they fometimes required to pay certain pensions, which ferved in lieu of the fultenance he was obliged to furnish to those knights who dwelt with him. At last, to obviate all caballing, and pursuit of employments, which might have very fatal confequences in a military body, they resolved to confide the administration of these commandries to the knights, according to their feniority; but in order to keep them still in that just dependence which they owed their superiors, they entrusted them with the commandries, on the foot only of a bare administration, for a certain time limited by the council, (ad decem annos, et amplius, ad beneplacitum nostrum;) as the commissions issued out of the chancery of Malta for this purpole expressly declare

by which it is evident that these administrations might be taken away.

EXPRESSIONS in such positive and explicit terms, prove undeniably that commandries are no absolute possessions or benefices, but meer concessions for which the administrator was accountable to the public treasury of the order, and liable to be turned out in case either of male-administration, or of irregularity in his life and conversation. The statutes (de prohibitionibus & pænis) say expressly, that if a knight be justly suspected of entertaining a loose commerce with a woman, and continues it after having been admonished of it, he shall be immediately ejected from his commandry, and all other possessions of the order, and that without the least formality of trial or profecution. The same penalty is denounced in this statute against duellers, usurers, all those who forswear themselves, and against all such receivers of the order as were guilty of any prevarication in their accounts. "Statim, non expectata alia " sententia, commendis, membris, & pensionibus pri-" vati censeantur, & fint."

But withal, from the same spirit of regularity and justice, if a commander has given no scandal to any one in his commandry; if he, like a good father of a family, has taken care of the estate entrusted to his administration; if he has been exact in paying the responsions that are to be remitted into the common treasury; if he has taken all due care of, and rebuilt the churches and buildings that depended on his commandry; if he has made an exact terrar, i. e. given a just court-roll of all the lands that hold under his fiefs, in the terms prescribed by the statutes: in fine, if, agreeable to the spirit of his order and his own obligations, he has taken care of the poor; the order, like a good mother, takes care to reward his exactitude; and after five years continuance in fuch an administration, if any more confiderable commandry falls vacant, allows him to (emeutir or) have his option of it in his turn, according to his feniority.

Bur

tic

03

But he is first of all, after having been five years in possession of his first commandry, to get his language to appoint commissioners to take an account of the good order in which they have found the buildings and the lands, and to draw it up in an instrument in form: this is called making his Improvements; and if this verbal process be received and approved at Malta, the commander may be advanced to a richer commandery. 'Tis to this wise precaution that the order is indebted for the preservation of its estates and buildings: every commander, in hopes of acquiring a greater estate, taking the utmost care of that which is entrusted to his administration.

THE knights, besides the commandries, may arrive at the great dignities of the order, according to their seniority and merit. I have already spoke of the grand priors, who are the superiors of all the religious that reside within their priories. They are directed to have a watchful eye over their conduct, and to see that the possessions of the order be justly managed; they preside in provincial chapters, and in their absence are to name a lieutenant, who, in that capacity, takes place of all the knights of the petty cross.

THERE are three kinds of bailiffs in the order, viz. the conventual, the capitulary, and the bailiffs by courtefy and "ad honores." The conventual bailiffs are so called, because they are bound to reside in the convent. They are chosen by the languages, and are likeways their chiefs, and pilliers of the inns. They are the first knights after the grand master: and though this dignity generally "s'emeutisse," or passes by option according to seniority, they yet are not so absolutely tied up to this rule, but the languages and the council may take a liberty of chusing any person whom they think most deserving.

As the language of Provence is the first of the order, it enjoys the first dignity in it, which is that of great commander. This conventual bailist is, by his post, president of the public treasury, and the court of exchequer.

d Great commander.

exchequer. He has likeways the supreme direction of the magazines, the arsenal, and the artillery; he names their officers, with the good liking of the grand master and council, and he takes them out of what language he pleases. His authority extends even to the church of St. John, several officers of which he names: he has the same right in the insirmary, and chuses the petty commander, whose office is to assist in visiting the medicines of the hospital.

THE dignity of marshal is the second of the order, and is annexed to the language of Auvergne, of which he is the chief and the pillier. In military affairs he commands all the religious, except the grand crosses, their lieutenants, and the chaplains. In time of war he gives the great standard of the order to any knight whom he thinks most worthy of it: he has a right of naming the first equerry; and when he is at sea, he commands the general of the gallies, and even the high admiral.

The care of the poor and fick being the great defign of the inftitution of the order, and the basis as it were of their profession, the treasury maintains an hospital at Malta, the charge of which amounts to 50,000 crowns per annum. This hospital is under the jurifdiction of the great hospitaller, who is the third conventual bailist, and the chief and pillier of the language of France. He nominates the overseer of the infirmary, who is always to be a knight of justice, the prior of the infirmary, and two scribes, all officers of but two years continuance, and presents them to the council for their approbation: but for all other employments about the hospital, he disposes of them by his sole authority.

THE admiral is chief of the language of Italy: in the marshal's absence, and at sea he commands the soldiers as well as the seamen: he names the inspector and the scribe of the arsenal; and whenever he demands

the Great marshal.

Great hospitaller.

F High admiral.

mands the generalship of the gallies, the grand master is obliged to propose it to the council, who either admit or refuse him as they see proper.

BEFORE England, Scotland and Ireland had ferarated from the church of Rome, and embraced the pretestant doctrines, the turcopolier 2 was the chief of that language. He, in that quality, had the command of the cavalry and the marine guards. Turcopole was a word used antiently in the Levant, and fignified a light horse, or kind of dragoon. As this dignity was abolished upon the seizure of the estates of the order in those isles, part of the functions of the turcopolier have been given to the grand master's seneschal.

THE grand bailiff is chief of the language of Germany. His jurisdiction extends itself over the fortifications of the old city, the antient capital of the island. He hath the same authority over the castle of Goza; the grand bailiffs having, during the time that the order had the fovereignty of Rhodes, enjoyed the like post with regard to the castle of St. Peter in Caria, as may be feen in the history.

THE dignity of chancellore is annexed to the pillier of Castile, Leon and Portugal. The chancellor prefents the vice-chancellor to the council. He is obliged to be present when any bulls are sealed with the ordinary feal, and fign the originals himfelf. 'Tis expressly required by the 35 chapter de bajulis, that he be able to write and read.

. Besides these conventual bailiffs, who are the chiefs and pilliers of the order, they have admitted the bi-.fhop of Malta, and the prior of the church of St. John, in the same quality; a these dignities are common to all the languages, and the prelates who enjoy them get over the default with respect to birth, " a defectu na. " talium," though they are chose out of the body of chaplains, who, by their rank, are excluded from all the dignities of the order. Vol. V.

T

THE

[&]quot; The turcopolier.

b The grand bailiff,

The high chanceller.

Bishop of Malta, and prior of the church.

The emperor Charles V. in his deed of conveyance of the ifles of Malta and Goza to the orMarch 24th der, referved to himfelf, and his successfors in the kingdom of Sicily, the advowsion of the bishoprick: and it was agreed, that in case of a vacancy of the see, the order should be obliged to present to him and his successfors kings of Sicily, three religious in priests orders, one of which was to be born in Sicily, and that these princes should have the liberty of chusing any one of the three whom they should best approve.

The prior of the church of St. John is deemed the prelate and ordinary of all the religious: he likeways officiates pontifically in his own church, and in all those of Malta, which are served by the chaplains of the order, and preceeds the bishop there. When this dignity becomes vacant, the council allow the chaplains to meet and confer about the choice of his successor. They even go so far as to vote for one: this being done, they carry the scrutiny to the council, who, without any regard to such as had the greatest number of voices in the meeting of the chaplains, determine, by their own votes, who shall succeed to this dignity, which gives the prior, in the same manner as the bishop, the first place in the chapters and councils, in quality of conventual bailiss.

Or these seven conventual bailists, four at least ought always to be residents in the convent; nor can any one of them be absent without leave from a full council. To obtain which, they must have at least two thirds of votes; and, in their absence, the languages, who cannot be without their heads, name immediately lieutenants to supply their places. When one of these pilliers is general of the gallies, and goes to sea, his language, notwithstanding his being absent for the service of the order, names in like manner his lieutenant, whose authority ceases as soon as ever the general returns into the harbour.

ALTHOUGH the capitulary bailiffs are not, like the conventual ones, obliged to an actual residence in the convent, yet there is no holding a general chapter without these great crosses, or their lieutenants. They are likeways obliged to assist at all provincial chapters, or at least to fend a knight thither to represent them. This fecond kind of bailiffs are not capable of being made conventual bailiffs, because the one are to reside in the convent, and the others in the priory, where there bailiwick lies. Of all these capitulary bailits, there was not any one, the bailiff of Brandenburgh excepted, who, like the grand priors, had any commanders under his jurisdiction. This bailiwick had formerly 13 that depended on it: but fince its falling into the hands of the protestants, fix of these commandries have been suppressed by the Lutherans. There are however still seven left, whose titles and revenues are preferved; but they are in the hands of the procestants. These Lutheran commanders however wear the crofs, and affume the name of knights; they likeways chuse their own bailiff, who names to the commandries. Several of these pretended commanders have befought the grand mafters to fuffer them to be received at Malta, and make their caravans on board the gallies of the order: but the difference in worship was an invincible obstacle to their admission into a callolic fociety. Some, when they could not obtain leave to fight under the banner of the order, have, from a principle of conscience, gone to make their caravans in Hungary against the Turks, at the time when the country was the feat of war. 'Tis likeways faid, that out of the same motive, they have sometimes sent considerable sums to Malta by way of responsions; but no regard was ever had to these seeming act of submission, and attachment to the body of the order; and the title of bailiff of Brandenburg is emeuti, or goes by option and seniority in the language of Germany, in the fame manner as a great many other capitulary bailiwicks in the other languages of the order, notwithstanding the estates and revenues are actually possessed by the infidels or protestants. All these dignities were formerly common to all the languages in general, without any diffinction, and lasted but from one general chapter chapter to the next; the chapter disposing of them to persons of the greatest merit. But since the end of the fourteenth century, they have been conferred on the languages only to which they were annexed. The knights, who were invested with them, wear upon their breast a great octangular cross of white linnen cloth, and take place of the knights of the little cross, though the latter should chance to be their seniors.

t

18

0

THE general chapters fometimes granted this honourable distinction to such private knights as had distinguished themselves by their valour against the infidels, and done any confiderable fervices to the order: they were filled bailiffs by courtefy. When there was no general chapter fitting, the grand mafter and the council named their bailings, " ad honores," and exerc'led this power for a long while: but as they were continually teazed with recommendations from christian monarchs in favour of knights who indeed were born their subjects, but were not thought the most deferving in the order, the grand mafter and council, to get rid of these importunities, thought it best to give up their right. They fancied that they, by this wife precaution, should put a stop to the ambition of the knights, but that warm and restless passion put them upon other expedients; they employed the same kind of recommendation to the popes, who, justly confidering themselves as the first superiors of all the religious orders, supplied the default and absence of a general chapter by their own authority. 'Tis true indeed, that the private knights or commanders, who thus get themselves made bailiffs by courtefy by the pope's briefs, do not acquire any particular privilege with regard to other promotions; for when any vacant commandries or dignities are to be disposed of, they have no right of preceding private knights who are their feniors: fo that all they get by the recommendation of the princes who interpose in their behalf, is no more than the privilege of wearing the great cross, the right of fitting in the chapter and the council when they are at Malta, and the taking place of knights who are their feniors,

in

in some affemblies, and days of ceremony: most of them empty honours, and that have nothing substantial in them.

ARTICLE IV.

Of the general chapter, and different councils of the order.

HE order of Malta, as it is now stilled, is a noble republic, partly resembling that of Venice in its government, which has more of an aristocracy than of any other form. The grand master, like another doge, presideth at the head; but the supreme authority is vested in the general chapter, a tribunal established ever since the soundation of the order for the determining of their warlike preparations, and the redressing public and private grievances: they treat therein of all affairs, whether ecclesiastical, civil, or military; they repeal and reform old statutes, when the observance of them is found inconvenient, and they make new ones, which subsist without appeal till the next chapter.

In ancient times these famous assemblies were held regularly every five years: fometimes, if the exigence of affairs demanded it, they called them every three years; but in process of time they came to meet only every ten years, and now there has not one been held for near an hundred years, to the great prejudice of their regular and military discipline. But as it may happen, which indeed were highly to be wished, that the zeal of the knights, and the wildom and prudence of the grand masters, may revive the usage of them, we think it not improper to specify in this place what persons these great assemblies were composed of, and the form that was observed in them; and that particularly, because the very same dignities, in default of a general chapter, give them a right of fitting in the councils.

When all the chaplains were arrived from the feveral provinces of Christendom in the head convent of the order, whether at Jerusalem, Rhodes, or Malta, the grand master, on the day fixed for opening the chapter, after hearing a mass of the Holy Ghost, entered the hall appointed for the assembly; when he took his place under a canopy, upon a throne raised three steps from the ground, and the members of the chapter, who were dignitaries, to the number of 54, placed themselves on the two sides in the following order, viz.

1. The bishop.

3. The great commander.

5. The hospitaller.

7. The great conservator.

9. The great chancellor.

11. The grand prior of Auvergne.

 The grand prior of Λquitaine

15. The grand prior of Toulouse.

 The grand prior of Lombardy.

19. The grand prior of Pifa.

21. The grand prior of Messina.

23. The castellan of Emposta, or the grand prior of Arragon.

25. The grand prior of England.

27. The grand prior of Germany.

29. The grand prior of Bohemia.

31. The bailiff of St. Euphemia.

2. The prior of the church.

$5.

47.

41.

45.

40

ξĺ

4. The marshal.

6. The admiral.

3. The grand bailiff.
10. The grand prior of St.

Giles.

12. The grand prior of France.

14. The grand prior of Champagne.

16. The grand prior of Rome.

The grand prior of Venice.

The grand prior of Barletto.

22. The grand prior of Capua.

24. The grand prior of Chrato or Portugal.

26. The grand prior of Navarre.

28. The grand prior of Ireland.

The grand prior of Hungary.

32. The grand prior of Catalonia.

33. The

33. The bailiff of Negre-

35. The bailiff of Venu-

37. The bailiff of Majorca.

39. The bailiff of Lyons.

41. The bailiff of Brandenburg.

43. The bailiff of Lora.

45. The bailiff of Lango and Leza.

47. The bailiff of Cremona.

49. The bailiff of Neuvillas.

51. The bailiff of la Roc-

53. The bailiff of Carloftad. 34. The bailiff of the Mo-

36. The bailiff of St. Stephens.

33. The bailiff of St. John of Naples.

40. The bailiff of Manosque.

42. The bailiff of Capfa.

44. The bailiff of Aquila. 46. The bailiff of St. Sepulchre.

48. The great treasurer.

50. The bailiff of Acre.

52. The bailiff of Armenia.54. The bailiff of St. Sebaffian.

THE second day of the assembly of the chapter, the members chuse, by plurality of voices, three commanders of three different languages or nations, to examine the proxies of such as represent the languages and priories, or are deputed by the priors and bailiffs that are When their powers have been examined and found good, they are admitted to give their votes; but if they are not drawn in due form, they are excluded the affembly. When the number of the members are fettled, every one of them in his turn, according to his own rank, and that of his language, prefents a purse with five pieces of money, as a mark of his perfect renunciation of all property. The marshal of the order, from the same principle, lays down the great standard, as do likeways the great officers the marks of their respective dignities, which they do not resume till after a new grant from the chapter is first obtained. This custom has been practiled from time immeimmemorial in the order, and cannot be too highly effected, provided it be not degenerated into mere ceremony.

THEY appoint at the same time three commissioners of three different nations to receive petitions, which are usually presented during the three first days, and afterwards are either dispatched or rejected by the general chapter: but as the members that compose it are very numerous, and by that means it would take up too much time to examine every particular affair, they therefore refer the consideration and decision of them to a committee of sixteen of their members who are all commanders.

THE feven languages chuse each of them two by a plurality of voices, and the chapter chuse two more to represent the language of England. These fixteen commissioners being thus elected take an oath before the grand master, who, with the rest of the members of the chapter, make a reciprocal promise upon oath to accept and ratify all that shall be resolved on and determined by the fixteen.

The committee withdraws to consider of the matters represented in these petitions to the chapter. But for sear less these sixteen commanders should not be acquainted with the true interests of the order, and perhaps less they should come to resolutions contrary to those of the grand master, his procurator, the vice-chancellor, and the secretary of the treasury are admitted into this particular assembly, but without any right of voting. The sixteen alone regulate, ordain, and judge absolutely, and without appeal, all matters which the chapter refers to their determination: and as these great assembles are to continue sitting above a fortnight, if there happen to be any affairs lest, which they had not time to terminate, they refer them to a new committee, which is called the council of reservations.

Besides this provisional and transient council, there are always, in default of a general chapter, four standing councils at Malta, viz. the ordinary, the complete, the fecret, and the criminal councils.

The ordinary council is composed of the grand mafler, the conventual bailiff, all the great croffes that are at Malta, the procurators of the languages and the most antient knight for that of England. In this council they decide all disputes that arise about receptions, pensions, commandries, dignities, and other matters relating to bulls granted by the order. THE complete council differs from the ordinary council, only by the addition of two ancient knights for each language, who before they can have a feat in it must have resided at least five years in the convent. Appeals lie to this complete council from the fentences of the ordinary, as well as of the criminal council. 'Tis not long fince they introduced a cuftom of appealing to Rome, whither, in default of a general chapter all affairs are intentibly carried. From the court of Rome come all dispensations, knights of minority, knights by courtely, bailiffs and great croffes by courtefy: and there is just reason to apprehend, that their lavish bestowing courtesses on particular persons will at length ruin the whole body of the order.

In the fecret council, affairs of state, and all sudden and extraordinary cases that require an immediate confideration, are treated. When any weighty complaint is made against a knight or any other religious, 'tis laid before, and debated in the criminal council. The grand master or his lieutenant presides in all these councils, and he only has a right of proposing any matter for them to debate on. When they come to vote in any case, he has two ballots, and when the voices are equal, 'tis his that weighs down the scale.

THERE is still another council, which is commonly called the chamber of the treasury, of which the great commander, chief of the language of Provence by virtue of his office, is president. To defray the immense expences which the order is obliged to be at, they raise funds out of the responsions due from the priories, bailywicks and commandries, and from the passage-fees, mortuaries, and vacancies. A mortuary is the revenue of a commandry for the remaining part

2

Marie L

France

Eà

be 20

frant

ozh:

to the

by 1

CETT

Is

on to 6ce

but

Sup

thro

the

ter

of the year, from the day of the commander's decease to the first of May next ensuing, and they call the vacancy the revenue of the whole year, which begins at the said first of May, and ends on the same day of the year following. The prizes which they take from the insidels, are also reckoned among the casual revenues of the order. All these several funds are under the direction of the chamber of the treasury, which cannot meet without the great commander or his lieutenant are not fatisfied with the debates in this court, they need only withdraw out of the chamber, and the session is immediately dissolved.

The great commander has two procurators of the treasury for his collegues, who were always chose out of the great crosses. The grand master and council change them every two years, but not both at once, that there may be always one left who is acquainted with the affairs and interests of the order. The grand master, in consideration of the interest he has in the just and exact administration of the revenues of the order, has a procurator in this chamber, who has a right of voting in it; and whenever he names him, he notifies it to the council.

This procurator, on account of the dignity of the person he represents, has his place in this council before the conventual conservator and the auditor of accompts. The chamber has a power of giving assignments to the value of 500 crowns, but when a warrant is to be issued for a more considerable sum, it must be laid before the council, who order it to be passed in the chancery.

THE high treasurer, or his lieutenant, hath a right of assisting at the accompts which are given to the common treasury. Antiently the treasurer was reckoned among the conventual bailiffs, and had the chest of the order in his keeping. But this function having been since assigned to the conventual conservator, and the bailiwick annexed to the language of Germany, the post of high treasurer is at present no more than a capitulary

capitulary bailiwick, appropriated to the language of France.

EACH language names every two years a knight to be auditor of the accompts; but they must be confirmed by the ordinary council, where they take the oath for their office. They take their places according to the rank of the languages they represent: their business is to go to the chamber as often as they are summoned to be present, when accompts are given in by the receivers, and all such persons as are concerned in the administration of the possessions of the order.

In treating of the conventual bailiffs we had occasion to speak of the great conservator. Antiently his office continued from one general chapter to another; but since the time that those assemblies appeared to be suppressed, the complete council changes him every three years. He is taken out of all the languages by turns; his functions cease at the assembly of a general chapter, and are suspended during the vacancy of the mastership

THE post of secretary of the treasury is an office in which a vast deal of business is transacted. 'Tis he who makes up and balances the accompts in the presence of the two auditors. He gives out and pays all bills of exchange; and as all the affairs of the treasury pass through his hands, they scarce ever change him but for very urgent reasons.

BEFORE the conventual and capitulary dignities were divided amongst the languages, the general chapters disposed of them in favour of persons of the greatest merit in the order, without regarding what nation they were of. But ever since the year 1466, they have been appropriated to particular languages: and the pilliers or conventual bailists abovementioned, when they are not silled up, have a right of demanding the sirst dignities that become vacan: thus in the language of Provence, the great commander may demand either the grand priory of St. Giles, or the grand priory of Toulouse, or the bailiwick of Manosque. In the lane guage of Auvergne, the great marshal has a right to the grand priory of that name, or to the bailiwick of Lyons: but when he is once possessed of one of these dignities, he has no option with regard to any other. Notwithstanding that in the language of France, the commandries in its dependence are annexed to particular priories, nevertheless the high dignities appropriated to that language are common to all the knights of the three priories of the same language; so that, independent from the priories, 'tis seniority alone that decides between the knights of the language of France, with respect to the grand priories of France, Aquitain and Champaign; of the bailiwick of the Morea, the refidence of which is fixed at Paris at St. John of Lateran; and of the post of treasurer, which is united to the priory of Corbeil.

In the language of Italy, the dignities and commandries are in common. In the language of Arragon, which is composed of the knights of the kingdom of Catalonia and of Navarre, if the great conservator is an Arragonian or Valentian, he has a right to the Castellany of Emposta, otherwise called the grand priory of Arar-

gon.

THE bailiwick of Majorca is common between the knights of Majorca and Catalonia: and the bailiwick of Capia is common to those of Arragon and Valencia; they remove from this bailiwick to the Castellany of Emposta.

THE bailiwick of Negrepont, which at present is "in partibus," and in the hands of the Turks, is annexed alternately to the languages of Arragon and Caffile: any one may resign it to take the inn, and they may likewise quit the inn by making their option of the same bailiwick.

The dignity of grand bailiff is common between the knights of Germany, and those of the kingdom of Bohemia. It gives a right to the grand priory of Germany, a post of greater antiquity in the order, than that of grand bailiff.

THE

tog:

B.:

The chancellor may be made grand prior of Castile, who, when he is invested with that dignity, becomes a grandee of Spain. The grand priory of Crato is in Portugal; but the great chancellor cannot make it his option for fear of engaging in a dispute with the king of Portugal, who pretends that the advowion of that dignity belongs to his crown.

THE grand priory of Hungary might anciently have been challenged by the great commander, pillier of the language of Provence, and the same right was afterwards conveyed to the admiral, who is pillier of the language of Italy. But at present that dignity, by the abdication which the Italians made in 1603, is fallen to the language of Germany, and is common to the knights of that nation and those of Bohemia. Notwithstanding that the last emperors of Germany have recovered the best part of Hungary from the infidels, nevertheless the order has not been able to recover the possession of their priories and commandries in that kingdom, although cardinal Colonitz, an old knight of Malta took the utmost pains in that affair. The commandries of Dacia, depending on the grand priory of Hungary. are entirely loft.

ALTHOUGH the provinces of Transylvania, Walachia, and Moldavia, composed formerly the ancient Dacia, nevertheles, in the order of St. John, this name of Dacia, in the language of the middle age, was given to the kingdoms of Denmark, Sweden and Norway. We have seen in the preceeding history, that the grand master Dieu-donné de Gozon wrote, during his administration, into these provinces, to oblige them to remit their responsions, and that in 1464, they sent wisitors thither to take care that the regular and military discipline should be observed in those places.

ARTICLE V.

Of the offices and employments in the order.

HE grand master has a right to chuse himself a lieutenant, who, when he has named him, notifies it to the council, but without having any need of their consent and approbation. He likewise names the sensethal of his houshold; and when the person who is invested with it has a brief from the pope, he enjoys his office for life.

The vice-chancellor presented by the great chancel or,
The secretary of the treasury named by the by the grand master.
The master Equerry named by the great marshal,

The grand mafter names the following officers.

Le cavalerizze, or master of the horse.

The receiver of the grand master's revenues.

The master of the houshold.

The grand master's procurator in the treasury.

The great chamberlain.

The deputy master of the houshold.

Le sous cavalerizze, or first gentleman of the horse.

The falconer.

The captain of the guards.

Three auditors.

The almoner and four chaplains.

Four chamberlains.

Four fecretaries for the Latin, French, Italian, and Spanish languages.

The fecretary or intendant of the revenues of the principality.

The credencier or clerk of the kitchen.

The garde-manger, or keeper of the pantry.

The keeper of the wardrobe.

Coun-

Coi

Cal

T

Th

30

T

£

The

The

The

Counsellors of the complete council.

Fourteen counsellors taken out of) named by the langrages, and anthe feven languages. Seven auditors of the accompts of proved by the

the treatury,

Two procurators of the treasury, great croffes, named by the grand mafter and approved by the council.

The conventual conservator who has been already mentioned when we treated of the conventual bailiffs.

Comptroller of the confervator, in the nomination of the grand mafter and council.

Castellan of the castellany. This office is entered upon the first day of Niay, and continues for two years.

Two procurators of the prifoners, of the poor, of widows and orphans; the one a knight, and the other a prieft, who is chaplain, or brother of obedience.

The protector of the monastery of St. Uriola,

2 prud'hommes or comptrollers of the church.

a commissioners of the poor beggars,

2 ditto of the alms,

2 ditto of the fick poor women,

2 protectors of the catechumens, and the new converts,

3 commissioners of the redemption, in the choice of the grand malter,

The overfcer of the infirmary,

a knight of the language of France, in the pretentation of the great hofpitaller.

The prior and sub-prior of the presented by the great infirmary, hospitaller, and approved by the grand The scribe, mafter and council. The Armonier or press-keeper, a great cross.

2 prud'-

§ a great cross and a knight. great croffes.

I great crofs, I knight. knights.

1 great cross, 1 knight.

I great crofs, 2 knights.

2 prud'hommes or comp- trollers of the infirmary, two knights named by the grand mafter, and approved by the council.
commissaries of war and fortifications, 24 great crosses of the four nations, viz. France, Spain, Italy and Germany.
4 ditto of the congregation of the gallies. 4 knights of the 2 ditto for regulating the caravans, 4 ditto of the naval armaments, 5 3 great croffes and 1 knight.
A prefident and four commissioners of the congregation of the ships of the four nations, I great cross, and 4 knights.
2 commissioners of the chest of the flags, I knight.
3 ditto of the novices of different nations. 2 ditto of the prizes, 2 knights.
2 ditto of the prison of the slaves, 2 knights. The governor of the saferving brother in the nominaprison of the slaves, tion of the grand master.
2 Commissioners of the mint, 2 great crosses.
4 ditto of the gentry, a ditto of agreements A knights of the four nations.
3 ditto of agreements, 3 knights. The representation of the pre-
The governor of the magazines, a fentation of the great commander.
2 prud'hommes, or comptrollers 2 knights. 2 commissioners of the two houses, 2 kinghts,
2 ditto of health, 2 ditto of health, 4 great croffes with them.
CITCHIA

knight, in the no-The commander of the artillery, mination of the great commander. 2 comptrollers of the artillery, 2 knights. 2 knights, named by 2 commissaries of the soldiers, the grand master. He is generally a bro-The fiscal, or attorney; ther of obedience. a ferving brother, nam. ed by the grand ma-The deputy-master-equerry, ster, who notifies his nomination to the council. a ferving brother in The porter of la Valette, the grand master's nomination. a knight in the nomi-The governor of the arfenal, nation of the great commander. a knight in the pre-The comptroller of the arienal, fentation of the admiral. The vestry-keeper, brother chaplains in The candle-keeper of the church the nomination of of St. John, the great command-The belfrey-keeper, He chuses the captain

The general of the gallies,

He chuses the captain of the admiral-galley, and presents him to the council.

As many captains and masters as there are gallies. The reveditor or inspector of the gallies.

The commodore of the ships.

As many captains as there are ships, and several subaltern officers.

The proveditor or overfeer of the ships.

The Governors.

Of Goza,
St. Angelo,
St. Elmo, Ricafoli,
The Town,
The isle de la Sangle,
The captain of la Valette,
The feven captains of the hamlets or villages of the country,

In the momination of the grand mafter.

In the grand mafter's nomination of the grand mafter grand mafter's nomination of the grand mafter grand gra

The captain of the grove, a ferving on.
ing brother,
The three judges of appeals, Lawyers and doctors of

The three judges of appeals, of criminal cases, laws named by the of civil causes,

OUT OF THE CONVENT.

Three embassadors in ordinary of the order.

M. the bailiff baron of Schaden em-(bassador to the pope M. the bailiff of Diestrincten em baffador to the (emperor The bailiff de Mefmes embassador to the king of France The bailiff d'Avila embassador to At Madrid. the king of Spain

The embassadors of France and Spainare always great crosses. The embassador of Rome is often a little cross; their employment lasts for three years, but it is frequently continued to them longer.

me

£1 le

let

We.

001

ir

0

In all the priories of the order there are receivers, whom the treasury presents to the council: their office is granted them for three years, but they sometimes continue them, and they may be great crosses.

THERE

THERE are likewise in all the priories several procurators in the presentation of the treasury, whose employments also last for three years.

THE money is coined with the impress and arms of the reigning grand mafter.

THE grand mafter don Raimond Perellos de Rocaful was the first that ever had guards; the company consists of 150 men, and they mount the guard at the palace, and the two gates of the city of la Valette.

THE grand master is to be deemed the first patron general of all those offices abovementioned, for which we have not assigned any particular patron: but he is obliged to propose his nomination to the council, who have a power either to allow or reject it.

Such are the dignities and offices of this order, the first of which is that of the grand master, the highest honour to which a knight of justice can arrive; and for the better understanding thereof, we shall now explain the form observed in his election, his titles, his rights, his prerogatives, and from whence his forces and revenues arise.

ARTICLE VI.

Of the election of the grand master.

S foon as the grand master is dead, the council breaks his seal: and, that the order may not be left without an head, they chuse a lieutenant of the mastership, who, in concert with the council, presides in the administration, but never makes any grant, or offer to touch the revenue of the grand mastership.

THE fecond day they lay the corps of the deceased in state in the great hall of the palace on a catasalco, or scaffold, with a complete suit of armour on his right hand, lying upon a table covered with a carpet of black cloth. They bury him in the evening with the proper solemnisies; the function of the conventual conservator is suspended during the vacancy of the mastership.

The

The fame day they appoint three knights of different nations, to receive what is due to the treatury from the religious that pretend to give their votes in the election. They then draw up a lift of all who have a right to vote in it, and fix it up publicly at the door of the church of St. John: they likewife fix up the names of all such as lose their right of voting for that time, by their being in debt to the treasury.

In the election of the doge of Venice, all the nobles above 30 years of age meet in the palace of St. Mark, and put as many balls into an urn as there are gentlemen present, thirty of which are gilt. The gentlemen to whose lot they fall put, in presence of all the state, nine of the gilded ones amongst 24 white ones, and the nine gentlemen who happen to draw them elect forty others, all of different families, but who are allowed to name themselves in the number. are again by lot reduced to 12; those 12 elect 25; the first naming three, and the two others two each. These 25 drawing lots again like the former, are reduced to nine, who name 45, which is five each: the 45 cast lots again, and are reduced to 11, who at last elect 41, who are the final electors of the doge, when they are confirmed by the great council; for if they are not, they must begin anew till they come again to another

A MAN, to entitle him to have a vote in the election of grand mafter, must have been received of justice into the order; must be at least 18 years of age; must have resided three years in the convent, have made three caravans, and not owe at most above ten crowns to the public treasury. Notwishstanding that the brother chaplains, provided they are priests, and the serving brothers of arms are allowed to give their votes in the several languages into which they have been admitted, they yet have no interner of share in the government afterwards. Such of the Maltese as have been received into any of the languages, by virtue of a particular dispensation of the popes, are not allowed to give their

to

their votes in the election, much less to be competitors for it; the reason of which general exclusion is in all probability to prevent any temptation which a Maltese grand master might possibly be under of perpetuating the sovereignty of Malta among his own countrymen.

THE third day after the grand master's decease is always fixed for the proceeding to the election of his fucceffor, and they never defer a choice of fuch importance to a longer time, not only to ftop all canvashings and cabals, but also to prevent certain pretensions of the court of Rome, where it is a maxim, that, so long as the vacancy is not filled up, the pope has a right of prevention to nominate the grand mafter; so that the third day all the convent affemble together after having heard a mass of the Holy Ghost in the church of St. John. The feven languages which compose the order retire every one into their respective chapels, except that which the lieutenant of the mastership is of, which takes its place in the nave of the church. These seven languages are each of them to chuse out of their respective knights, three electors, to whom they give up all the right of election: these make in all one and twenty electors.

THE religious being shut up in their chapel write in their turns, and according to their seniority, the name of the knight of their language whom they chuse to be the first of the three electors they are to name. And, in order to ascertain their election, they are obliged to put their own name at the bottom of their ticket, and then seal it with the seal of the language.

WHEN all the voters of a language have given their votes in this manner, the procurators of the language take all the billets, and, counting them over in the prefence of all the language, they examine whether their number agrees exactly with that of the votes; for if it were to differ they would burn them immediately, and vote afresh till the number of tickets tallied exactly with the number of religious who have a right to give their votes.

But if every thing appears in due order, the procurators, with the most ancient of the language, openthe tickets on the fide on which the name of the knight is written, whom they chuse for their first elector; after which they count the votes given in favour of the other knights who were competitors in the same election, and if none of them have a clear quarter part of the ballots of his language, they must begin to vote again afresh, till such time as one knight has a clear quarter part of the votes; and then he takes the oath required by the statutes before the lieutenant of the mastership, and goes into the conclave: after this all the voters begin to ballot again for chusing the two other electors, who, like the first, carry it by plurality of voices; but the three electors are generally named at the very first balleting.

By a clear quarter part of the votes in a language is meant a number which cannot be found four times among those who compose the language: so the clear quarter part of nine is three, of thirteen four, of seventeen sive, &c. If it happens that there is an equality of votes as well as a clear quarter part, the senior carries it, and the three persons elected go up to the Conclave where they themselves act as electors.

EVERY language chuses afterwards another knight to represent England by plurality of voices, and out of these seven knights three are chose, by plurality of votes, to enter the Conclave, and represent the language of England. These three new electors must be chose out of three different nations. It must be observed, that if the lieutenant of the mastership should be named for one of the three electors whom his language is to chuse, the council of state would immediately put another in his place, in order that the government might not be left a moment without a chief and a superior.

WHEN the three electors of each language are affembled in the Conclave to the number of twenty one, and are joined by the three electors for the language of England, making in all four and twenty knights of justice or great crosses, though indeed the bishop of Malta, and the prior of the church, may be of the number, their dignities being a dispensation for their default of birth. These four and twenty, taking an oath before the lieutenant of the mastership, afterwards chuse the president of the election, whose nomination abolishes the office of lieutenant of the mastership. After this they proceed to the choice of the tirumvirate, i. e. of a knight, a chaplain, who is a priest and a serving brother, to whom the first 24 electors deliver up the power of electing, when they retire out of the Conclave.

jultice

THIS triumvirate having taken their oaths retire into the chamber of the Conclave, and proceed among themfelves to the choice of a fourth elector: when this fourth is joined with them, these four new electors chuse a fifth, and so on till they have chose to the number of thirteen, which with the three first, who were named by the 24, make up the number of I belectors, two for every language, including that of England. In the nomination of the first eight, including the triumvirate in the number, they have no regard to the pre-eminence of the languages; but in the nomination of the other half, they always observe the rank which the languages have in respect of one another; so the fixth of this second half, which is the 14th in the order of the 16, is that taken out of any language they please to represent England.

If the triumvirate do not in an hour's time agree in the election of the fourth elector abovementioned, they are each of them obliged to name one, and the 24 first electors ballot for them in the vestry, where they make their scrutiny on this occasion; and he of the three named by the triumvirate, who has the most votes among the 24, carries it; but if they all chance to have an equal number of voices, the senior of the three would be preserved. The 13, according as they are called, take each the usual oath, before the president of the election, before they join the triumvirate; and when they are all together, they ballot among themselves for one or more persons; he who has a majority of votes is made grand master. In case of an equal division among the 16 electors, the vote of the knight of the election carries it, and turns the scale. As odd as this form of election may seem, the knights had reason enough to establish it in that manner; for these different changes of elector break all the measures private men might take; and when all depends upon the choice of persons who owe their power to the favour of fortune, all artifices and intrigues prove ineffectual: besides, this is a means in this noble republic to please almost every particular person in it, by the share which they statter themselves they have had in the election of the grand master.

THE balloting being over, the triumvirate leave the thirteen who had been concerned with them in the election, and, going up to the rails of the gallery which is over the great gate, the knight of the election, having the chaplain on his right, and the ferving brother on his left, demands three times of the religious affembled in the church, if they are disposed to ratify the election they have just made of a grand master; and when all the affembly has answered that they approve their choice, the knight of the election proclaims him aloud, and the new grand mafter, if he is present, goes and feats himself under the canopy. He first takes the oath which is administred to him by the prior of the church, and after Te Deum has been fung by way of thankfgiving, he receives the homage of all the religious, and is carried from thence in triumph to the pa-The day of the election, the treasury, in order to fave the house of the mastership from being plundered, distribute three crowns to each religious, both novices as well as those who are professed. And a day or two after the election, the full or complete council puts the new grand mafter in possession of the sovereignty of the isles of Malta and Goza; so that by his new dignity, he reunites in his person a military and regular fuperiority over all the religious of his order, and at the same time a sovereignty and all manner of royal rights rights over the laity who are his subjects. But how lawful foever this fovereign authority may be, it has, nevertheless, ever fince the settling of the inquisition in Malta, been incroached upon by the pretentions of the inquifitors. Formerly the supreme council of the order had the fole cognizance of every thing relating to faith and religion. But during the mastership of the grand master de la Cassiere, the bishops Cubellet and Royas, having fuccessively got orders from Rome, that the cognizance thereof should be referred to them, the order being incented at these proceedings, by way of revenge applied to pope Gregory XIII. and prevailed with him to fend an inquisitor to Malta to take away that jurisdiction from the bishop. 'Tis true indeed that the council of the order, for the preservation of their authority, infilted with his holine's, that the officer of the court of Rome should not proceed in any case, but in concert with the grand mafter, the bishop, the prior of the church, and the vice-chancellor of the order: fo that the authority of this tribunal was divided between the inquisitor and the principal officers of the order.

But this wife and prudent temperament did not subsist long; for the inquisitors, from a kind of emulation fo common among them, took in other affeffors, in o der to make themselves absolute masters in their tribunal, though still under pretence of maintaining the authority of the boly see; and not content with this step, they took another which is scarce to be parallelled: they created to prodigious a number of what they call the Familiars of the holy office, that they have formed with this fet of people a new government as it were, and a body of subjects, who, by virtue of certain patents of the inquisition, pretend to exempt themselves from the fovereign authority of the order. These subiects of the order, who may very well be treated as rebels, make up two thirds of the inhabitants of the island; so that all who have either money or credit with the inquisitor, pretend that they, by virtue of his protection and patents, are not obliged to take arms upon the grand master's orders, to repulse the infidels, VOL. V

when they make descents upon the island. The secre views of the inquifitors are in all probability these; they suppose, that after they have robbed the grand mafter of his natura' subjects, they may afterwards reduce him by infensible degrees to the miserable condition of being their inferior. And in a memorial prefented by the language of France, to king Lewis the X.Vib, of glorious memory, we see that the inquisitors of that time, forgetting the respect due to the character of a fovereign, had the boldness to pretend to oblige the grand mafter to ftop his coach when they should meet him in the fireet with theirs. After this, nothing was wanting to complete the ambitious projects of the inquifitor, but to feize on the revenues annexed to the dignity of grand master, both those which arose from the principality of the iflands, as well as those that belonged to him by virtue of the grand mafterfhip.

The revenues of the principality confist in the rights of the admiralty, at the rate of ten per cent. upon all prizes, and comprehend likewise the customs, aff. ff-ments, imposts, lands of the Demesne, farms, houses, gardens, duties on alienation and purchasing of lands, fines and confications.

THE revenues of the mastership confist first of fix thousand crowns which the treasury pays him every year for his table, two hundred crowns for keeping his palace and country-hou e in repair; a very scanty fum indeed with regard to his dignity, but which shews the frugality and temperance of the age when this regulation was made. Secondly, the grand mafter has a year's revenue of all the commandries of courtefy, which he diffroics of every tive years in each priory: and he has I kewife in every priory the perpetual enjoyment of one commandry, which is called the Magiftral Chamber, because it is annexed to the mastership. He may, in case he thinks proper, have them managed in his own name, or otherwise he may give them to any knights who have deferved well of the order by their fervices; and when the grand master beflows flows one of these magistral commandries upon a knight, he may, besides two annates, or the revenues of two years which he receives out of it, reserve likewise a pension to himself; but the knight who is gratised with this commandry, in consideration of these clogs upon it, is dispensed from paying any mortuary or vacancy to the order.

The grand masters have frequently ships out a cruifing, and have themselves all the profits that arise from the prizes they take: they likewise, in conjunction with the council, give leave to such knights as are able, to sit out vessels against the Turks, and cruise with the master's slag; but as fortrassic and merchandize, that kind of venal profit is forbid by the statutes; and besides, all commerce is odious to most of the languages, who would think that a gain of that nature would debase the nobility of their extraction.

End of the differtation upon the government.

DISSERTATION

ON

Two cotemporary and original historians, who relate the same sait, but with circumstances so very disferent, that they entirely alter the nature of it.

CUCH as undertake to travel through the immense fpace of history, often meet with rocks in their road , which they can hardly keep from splitting on, without carrying the plummet always in their hand, and calling in the affiltance of criticism, which a prudent writer should consult every moment, as a compais absolutely necessary to steer by in this kind of na-No body need be told that this art, like other sciences, is guided by principles and rules that are peculiar to it: The first that is proposed to us is, to advance no fact, as far as is possible, but upon the testimony of cotemporary and original historians: 'tis this testimony that engages the reader's considence and e-Rablishes his assurance of facts. But if such antient authors, of equal authority, relate the same fact in a different manner, by what rule can a later writer be determined? What motive can fix his choice, and to which of the two historians shall he give the preference?

This is the very difficulty I met with in that part of my feventh book, where I give an account of the manner in which prince Gem or Zizim, fon to Mahomet II. was received in the ifle of Rhodes by the grand mafter and the knights of St. John. To guide me in my relation of that fact, I confulted the cotemporary and original historians: I found two of them, who deferve that title indisputably, who yet contradict one another directly in the narration of the same fact. The furth first is William Caoursin vice-chancellor of the order. and the other is William de Jaligni fecretary to Peter de Bourbon, second of the name, seignior of Beaujeu, who to the prejudice of the dake of Orleans, prelumptive heir of the crown, feized on the government, and under whose administration most of the affairs, of which his fecretary gives an account, were transacted. The whole affair between those two writers is to know, whether after the death of Mahomet II. prince Zizim his fon, then in quest of an asylum against the power of his brother Bajazet who was for putting him to death; whether, I say, this unfortunate prince applied to the grand master of Rhodes, in order to obtain from him a retreat in his dominions, and a pass to come in and go out of them as he pleased; and whether this pass was sent him by a squadron of ships to serve him for an efcort, as Caoursin relates; or whether he did not throw himself into the port of Rhodes and expole himself to be made a prisoner of war by the knights, purely to avoid being taken by the gallies of the fultan his brother, which were pursuing him on all fides, as Jaligni informs us, who pretends, that the grand mafter and the knights feized on his perfon, "Hoping, says he, to make their advantage of "him."

See the 7th book of this history, p. 85. Vel. III.

IF we follow Caoursin, Zizim was Bajazet's younger brother; but he says, the prince pretended to the crown, as being born in royalty, after the emperor Mahomet his father was in possession of the empire; whereas Bajazet, though the elder, was born in the reign of Amurath II. when Mahomet was but a private man. "Fateor, he makes Zizim say, fratrem prius "in lucem prodiisse; sed patre est genitus non rege." Jaligni on the contrary says expressly, that Zizim was the eldest The vice-chancellor adds, that Zizim being defeated in two battles against his brother, and having in vain sollicited the soldan of Egypt for succours, and finding himself without troops, skulking up and down in the midst of his own territories and the rocks of mount Taurus, was solved to seek an asylum in the of Rhodes; that he sent embassadors to the grand master to desire a pass from him, "Fidem publicam im"plorat, said these embassadors to d'Aubusson, quâ "tutus in vestram ditionem pateat aditus." The historian continuing his nurration, says, that the grand master sent him this pass, with full liberty of coming in and going out of his dominions, in the very form that the embassadors desired.

WE have feen in the feventh book, that the grand malter sent these ministers back with a strong squadron to convoy the prince to the isle of Rhodes, "Firmatus " animo, fays Caourfin, navim confcendit & Hiero-" folymorum equitum fidei se committit." He trusts himself, says the historian, to the faith of the knights of St. John of Jerusalem. Zuniga grand prior of Castile giving him his hand to help him aboard his ship, and addressing himself to him, spoke as follows: We receive you, fir, fays he to him, as our guest, and not as an enemy; " Te excipimus ut hospitem, non ut " hostem." This was afterwards confirmed to him by the grand mafter, who faid to him, when he accosted him, fince you are come into our territories as our friend and guest, it is fit we should render you all the offices of hospitality: " Tu ut hospes & amicus ac-" cedis, jura quidem hoipitii ut præbeamus decens 66 eft."

By r the treaty which the grand master afterwards made with sultan Bajazet soon contradicted a conduct that appeared at first so generous; for the knights agreed with the sultan, in consideration of a pension of forty sive thousand ducats of gold, to keep Zizim in their power, and hinder him from disturbing the sultan his brother in the enjoyment and government of the empire, so long as on his side he did not invade their territories or those of the christian princes. Caons and after him Pere Bouhours, to excuse the injustice and scandalousness of such a treaty, that was inconsistent with the pass which the grand master and the older had sent to prince Zizim, pretend that he engaged.

ed, when he defired the pass, to guide himself entirely by the grand master's advice; that the pass was granted on this express condition; and that besides, Zizim had given a very ample letter of attorney to the grand master to treat with the Turks as he should see fitting; and it was, says Pere Bouhours, by virtue of this letter of attorney, that the grand master brought Zizim into the treaty of peace.

As for what relates, add these two historians, to the forty or forty five thousand ducats, which ill designing people make use of as an handle to asperse the order, 'tis certain that the money which they received from Bajazet was employed in Zizim's maintenance; and the grand master, far from making any advantage of it to himself, made an addition to it out of his own revenue; as may be easily imagined, if we consider the royal magnificence with which the Ottoman prince was always treated, to say nothing of the infinite expences necessary to be made on his account, both in sending and receiving embassadors.

But it may be urged, in answer to these two historians, that supposing, as they pretend, the Turkish prince had, in order to obtain the pass, submitted to be guided entirely by the grand master's advice and orders, yet this pretended submission and engagement could never have been stipulated to the prejudice of the prince's liberty, the sole end and principal motive of the pass; otherways the asking it on such a condition was to destroy it entirely. As to what is alledged relating to a letter of attorney that Zizim gave to the grand master, that reason seems to be altogether as frivolous.

This prince, if they are to be credited, gave a letter of attorney to the grand mafter, to treat in his name with the grand feignior his brother; and the proxy makes use of this letter of attorney as a pretence, in concert with his enemy, to keep him in close imprisonment. As to the 45000 ducats of gold that Bajazet furnished for his brother's pension, I leave the reader to judge, whether a sum so considerable as that, especially in 1485, was not enough for the maintenance of a prisoner and his guards. If any body would take the pains to make an estimate of this sum, with regard to what it would produce in our days, they will easily see whether there was any occasion for the grand master, as his two historians say, to make up out of his own revenue, what was wanting for the expences of the Turkish prince; or whether a pension so considerable, as that which the grand master remitted every year with great exactness to Venice, was not one of the motives that engaged the order not to part with so useful a prisoner. After having consulted Caoursin, let us fee how faligni relates the same event.

cspeci-

Or all the facts related by these two historians, in which they contradict one another, I find but one of any great importance, or which, in my opinion, concerns the honour of the grand master and his order, and that is the pass which Caoursin pretends Zizim obtained before he entered into the port of Rhodes. For if he only offered himself there as a prisoner of war, which Jaligni afferts, there is no doubt but the order might dispose of their prisoner, transport him to France, treat with his brother about his pension, deliver him up, and confign him over a prisoner to the pope. There is nothing in all this that clashes with the ordinary rules of justice and equity. But if we only confider the facts as Caourlin states them, and that the Turkish prince, before he delivered himself up to the knights, did indeed take the precaution of a pass for his fecurity; how is it possible to vindicate the grand master and his order from a breach of promise, and a violation of the public faith which they engaged to that prince? Here lies the difficulty; which of the two historians shall we prefer? every thing seems to favour Caoursin. This historian was not only cotemporary, but likeways actually at Rhodes when Zizim arrived there; he was a minister, and one of the principal officers of the order, and in all probability, as he was vice-chancellor, he was the very perion that drew up and figned the pass: and what seems to determine fill still more in his favour is, that this writer, who feems passionate for the interests of his order, and in all his works lofes no occasion of celebrating their illustrious actions, does on this occasion ingenuously relate a fact that is not much for its honour. The vanquished party's owning a defeat, is an incontestible proof for the glory of the vanquisher.

th

.

BUT that which might make us suspect Caoursin's account is, that this writer amplifies and exaggerates every thing he fays; and that on the foundation of a certain and undoubted fact, he almost builds a romance, or at least dresses up his relation of it in circumstances that very often have little or no probability in them. If he speaks of Mahomet, father to Zizim, he makes him a forcerer and a magician, though it is well enough known that that prince was a perfect atheist, and owned no divinity but fortune. When he speaks of the death of that sultan, he indeed damus him, and that with reason; but then, as if that were not enough, he precipitates him foul and body into hell, where he caused, says this fine historian, so abominable a stink, that the insupportable stench was a great addition to the torments of the damned. " bitramur enim, fays he, tam scelestum, tam fætidum, " tam fævum cadaver terram intra fua viscera minimè " continuisse, et in damnatorum perpetuum chaos deje-

" cisse; cujus fætor ipsum etiam infernam inficit, et

" damnatorum fupplicia graviora reddit.

This author's stile is full as extraordinary as the romantic air which he gives to his narrations. He has no notion but of one kind; his favourite figure is the direct stile; and, what is a little surprising, all the compliments that he bestows on Zizim are so many harangues; we meet with "prince Zizim's speech to "the foldan of Egypt, to the prince of Caramania, to the grand mafter" in every page of his book, with the answers of all these princes in the same plain direct stile. Yet these are the places of his work where perhaps he has taken the most pains; these pieces are stuffed with learned citations and common places, but unluckily they are seldom proper for the subject, much leis fuit the character of the persons in o whose mouth he puts them. In fine, before this prince s arrival at Rhodes, he carries him as far as Jerusalem and Mecca, which journies indeed he actually made; but as if he had flood behind him all the time, he recites verbatim the several prayers which the Turkish prince offered up either to God or to Mahomet, the false prophet of his law. I own these are no more than the faults of a bad orator, which may possibly be consistent with his veracity in the facts that he relates; but after all, the person that could allow himself to compose such frothy compliments, and such a number of harangues, might likeways take the liberty of compoling Zizim's pass and magnificent entry into Rhodes, which he fancied would be a fine embellishment to his history.

JALIGNI, on the contrary, appears more simple in his narration; his work contains only annals of the most important matters that passed under the reign of Charles VIII. He was secretary to a prince, who then governed France during the minority of the king his brother-in-law, and who even, after his majority, kept a great share in the government for some time: and if Zizim had come to Rhodes, and afterwards into France, only upon the assurance of a pass, how could they possibly be ignorant of it in that kingdom? Would not that prince himself have demanded the benefit of the public faith? Whereas, being no better than a prisoner of war, those who took him might very well detain him, dispose of him, or take a rantom for him, without acting contrary to equity and the law of nations.

BESIDES Matthias Corvinus king of Hungary, the terror of the Turks, the republic of Venice, and even the foldan of Egypt, all of them at that time enemies to Bajazet, having made great instances to the grand master to deliver up Zizim to them, in hopes that his bare appearing on the frontiers would give new life to his party, and might bring about some revolution in the empire; if this unfortunate prince had not been a prisoner of the order, what pretence could the knights have had to keep him in priton contrary to the affirance of the pais, of their own interests, and of those of all Christendom? Would not all their fovereigns have complained of tuch an infamous piece of injustice? Would there not have been some traces or other lest of their complaints in the historians of the time? In fine, another proof that the knights thought they had a right to dispole of the perion and liberty of the urkish prince, and that they considered his ran om as palt of their own effects, is that pope Innocent VIII. having demanded him of the order with a defign of putting him at the head of a league that was formed against the grand feignior, the grand mafter and supreme cour cil of the order tent vice-chancellor Caoui fin to Kome, with o her embaffadors, to treat with the pontiff about it; and the knights, after various negotiations, would not confent to deliver up the Turkish prince to him, but upon condition, that by way of equivalent, he should unite to their order those of St. Sepulchre and St. Lazarus, with all the eftates and revenues belonging to them. Neither was the private interest of the grand master forgot in this treaty; and in which it was expressly stipulated, that as soon as Zizim thould be arrived at Rome, the pope should send d'Aubesson a cardinal s hat. If Zizim had not been the priioner of those knights, would it not have been a dishonour to them to exact fuch vast recompences for violating the faith they had plighted to that prince?

prifoner

But this is to alledge the very thing contested as a proof, and is a begging of the question: all depends upon knowing which is most to be credited, Caoursin or Jaligni. The first allows that there was a pass, and even gives one to understand, and that plainly enough, that it had been violated. According to the other historian, Zizim was only a prisoner of war, who confequently had no pass sent him; which of the two historians are we to believe? In order to get rid of his uncertainty, and reconcile these authors in some measure, I fancied it would be best to divide my confidence, and give part of it to Caoursin, particularly with regard to the facts that passed at Rhodes, to which he was an eye witness, and reserve the other for Jaligni, and follow him in his account of that prince after his arrival in France. This expedient seemed to me at first reasonable enough, but when I came to apply it, I found my scruples springing up, and the same difficulties occurring over again.

For if the Turkish prince, as Caoursin afferts, and which indeed is likely enough, did not enter Rhodes till he had a pass, and might enjoy entire liberty in that place; if it be true, as he advances, that this prince went into France of his own accord, the better to avoid the snares that his brother might lay for him so long as he should continue in the east, and in hopes of obtaining powerful succours from Louis XI. to set him upon the throne of his fathers: [aligni ought to have told us for what reason, and at what time and place he was arrested in France, whereas he does not mention the least syllable of it. If we believe Caoursin, Zizim enjoyed a full liberty at Rhodes: we find him likeways free at his leaving Rhodes, and at the time of his embarkation : and if we follow [aligni, the prince was a prisoner all the time he was in that kingdom. The French historian, speaking of his abode in France, calls him not so often by his own name, as by that of the prisoner. This transition from a state of liberty. to his being confined in a tower, ought it not to be taken notice of by this writer? Why has he not told us whether the poor prince was arrested in the vessel of the order that carried him from Rhodes into France? or whether he waited till he was landed in some part of that kingdom? in fine, whether they did not put him in prilon till after the tower built for that purpose was fin flied! Is it allowable in an event of fo rare and fingular a nature, to be either in the dark as to the principal circumstances of it, or to suppress them? The Rhodian, in my opinion, is more particular in this respect; and it is easy to be seen from his narration, that they made no open attempt upon Zizim's liberty, till orders came from Rhodes to that purpole, pursuant to the treaty made between the grand feignior and the grand mafter. As the order, by that treaty, engaged itielf, in confideration of a penfion of forty-five thoufand ducats of gold, to keep the Turkish prince in their power, they certainly thought it necessary to keep him in confinement, in order to prevent his escape. 'Twas in this treaty that they trafficked for the liberty of this unfortunate prince, and his impriforment was the feal of the new alliance between the Turks and the Christians: but for fear of putting any biass upon the reader's judgment, we have thought proper to annex to this differtation an extract of the two historians, by which he will be enabled to make a judgment whether there ever was a pass granted, and whether such fafe conduct was violated by the grand mafter and the knights of Rhodes.

orders

TEXTE DE JALIGNI.

E roy, dit Jaligni, étant encore à Paris ledit mois de Janvier, mil quatre cens quatre-vingt et huit, il arriva per devers lui un ambassadeur de l'empereur des Turcs, qui conduisoit un ambassadeur du Roy de Naples. Par cet ambassadeur, le Turc écrivoit au Roy des lettres de créance: la cause pourquoi le Turc écrivoit, et envoyoit son ambassadeur, étoit pourcequ'en France étoit son frere aîné, à qui appartenoit toute la seigneurie, et y avoit été amené il y avoit déjà quatre ou cinq ans : car en l'an mil quatre cens quatrevingt et un, l'empereur des Turcs mourut, lequel délaissa à deux de ses enfans la plus grande seigneurie du monde, pourcequ'il possedoit deas empires, et onze royaumes, et tenoit sous son obcissance la Turquie, la Grece, et la plûpart de l'Afie. Après sa mort, pourceque son fils ainé étost fort éloigne de Constantinople, où le Turc a coûtume de faire sa résidence, et qu'il étoit occupé en une guerre, son frere puiné durant cette absence, s'assura des gens d'armes qui étoient au tour de son pere, et de plus s'empara de toutes ses finances, et usurpa le titre de la seigneurie. L'ainé, d'autre part, schant les nouvelles du décès de son pere, se mit en chemin par mer pour venir prendre possession de cet empire, comme feigneur naturel; mais en venant, il apprit que sondit frere s'etoit saist de tout; et lui, étant encore iur mer, il rencontra des gall'es en course, que fon frere a on envoyées pour le guetter et le prendre au passage; et far tellement pressé d'icelles gallées, qu'il fut contraint de se mettre en fuite, et se lauver. pour cequ'il étoit bien affiré de sa mort s'il étoit pris. Il tut donc tellement poursuivi qu'il lui convint se jetter à refuge dedans le port de Rhodes; laquelle chose étant venue à la connoissance du grand mai,re et des chevaliers, incomment ils le laistrent de sa personne. étant fort joyeux de l'avanture qui leur étoit advenue; et eipérant d'en bien faire leur profit, ils donnerent bon et fûr ordre pour la garde de la perionne. que le frere qui usurpoit la Seigneurie, sçut comme sondit frere étoit ainsi échappé il en fut très-déplaisant; toutefois incontinent après, il envoya une grande et folemnelle ambassade devers le grand maître de Rhodes, pour pratiquer, s'il leroit possible, de ravoir ion frere, ou à tout le moins d'être affare qu'il ne lui pût nuire à l'avenir. Enfin il fut conclu entre eux que ledit frere jouissant, donneroit par chacun an une bonne et grande pension au grand maître de Rhodes. Et en outre, qu'il fourniroi, autre grande fomme d'argent pour la dépense de son trere spolié, et pour sa garde: outre quoi alliance fut faite, et toute sureté baillée à ceux de Rhodes de leurs terres et seigneuries. Or combien que le grand maître de Rhodes eût lors un avantageux parii avec le Turc, toutefois il fut en doute qu'à la longue la seigneurie de Rhodes n'en fût brouilée, et en danger, s'il détenoit continuellement son prilonnier a Rhodes, croyant bien que le frere jouisfant seroit incessamment à l'aguet pour l'avoir, ou par amour, ou par trahison, ou de force. D'autre part, il redoutoit les enterprises des voisins, comme du Souldan, des Venitiens, du roy de Naples, et autres, et penloit pensoit que chacun d'eux employeroit ses c'nq sens pour trouver moyen de l'avoir, et en faire chacun son profit; aussi étoit-il fort requis par le pape de le lui bailler, pour le profit et l'avantage du faint fiege apostolique. Enfin pour éviter tous ces inconvéniens, il délibéra de le mettre en lieu fûr; et pourcequ'il étoit natif de France, de la comté de la Marche, et de la maison d'Aubusson, il résolut de l'envoyer en ce roya me, considerant que le roy étoit fort éloigné des seigneuries du Turc, et qu'il n'auroit guéres d'intérêt fur le fait de cet empire Ottoman, à qui il demeurat des deux freres. Toutesfois avant que de l'envoyer en France, il envoya sçavoir du roy Louis onziéme de ce nom, si son plaisir seroit de le vouloir bien souffrir en son rovaume ; laquelle chose le roy accorda volontiers. près donc que ledit maître de Rhodes eût ainfi eu le congé et la permission du Roy, il prépara le voyage de fon prisonnier, et l'envoya descendre au pays de Languedoc; de là il le fit mener en ladite comté de la Marche, en la maison du seigneur du Bocalami, qul étoit parent d'icelui grand maître; et la fut détenu ce prisonnier, qui avoit pour sa garde aucuns chevaliers de Rhodes, lesquels étoient pour la plûpart parens dudit grand maître. Il étoit fort bien entretenu de sa personne en toutes ses necessitéz et besoins; aussi son frere empereur payoit bien sa dépense. Ce prisonnier avoit oui parler du roy Louis, et de la grandeur de son royaume, et de sa seigneurie, et aussi de ses s'aits; par quoi il désiroit fort de le voir et de parler à lui. Les chevaliers qui l'avoient en garde le firent sçavoir au Roy, lequel fit réponte, que pour la grande renommée que fon pere avoit eue, qui en son tems étoit jusqu'alors le plus grand prince de la Loi de Mahomet, et lequel avoit le plus fait de belles conquêtes qu'aucun autre, il le verroit volontiers, et communiqueroit de très bon cœur avec lui; mais que bonnement il ne le pouvoit faire, attendu qu'il n'étoit pas de la Loi; et ordonna de plus qu'on lui dit, que s'il vouloit embrasser la 1eligion Chrétienne, il lui promettoit d'employer toute sa puissance afin de lui aider à recouvrer les leigneuries de fon empire ; et de plus, il lui donneroit de quoi entretenir son état : et si d'avanture il vouloit cependant demeurer en son royaume, qu'il lui donneroit des héritages et seigneuries, avec la jouissance desquelles il pourroit vivre comme un prince. Les chevaliers firent icavoir tout cela à leur prisonnier; mais pourquoi que ce fût il ne voulut délaisser sa Loi, et demeura encore en ladite comté de la Marche, en la maison du susdit Bocalami, jusqu'audit mois de Janvier mil quatre cens quatre-vingt et huit, qu'après plusieurs poursuites et instances que le pape, et le saint siege apostolique avoient faites envers le roy, afin d'avoir ce prilonnier, pour le grand profit et interest du saint siege; et qu'à cette cause il y avoit en ambassade envoyée exprès devers le roy, laquelle y étoit encore. Le roy se montrant vrai fils de l'Eglise, et voulant en suivre l'amour que ses prédécesseurs avoient eu envers le saint siege, dont à cette cause ils ont acquis le titre de très-chrétiens rois de France; il livra et remit ce prisonnier aux ambaffadeurs du faint pere pour le mener à Rome: ce qui arriva un peu auparavant que l'ambassadent du Turc arrivat à Paris, lequel ambassadeur offroit de la part de son maître au roy, de grands partis et avantageuses conditions, comme de bailler toutes les reliques de Dieu notre Sauveur, des apôtres, et des faints et faintes, que son pere avoit trouvées à Constantinople lorsqu'il sit la conquête de cette ville, et dans toutes les aures villes qu'il avoit conquises sur la chrétienté; de plus, il offroit de faire tout son effort pour conquérir la terre sainte, et puis de la remettre ès mains du roy; aussi officit-il une grosse pension pour l'entretenement de son frere, pourvû que le roy le retînt dans son royaume. Lorsque ces grandes offres se sirent, le prisonnier étoit encore dedans le royaume, et l'eût bien pû le roy recouvrir et s'en rendre le maître ; et même aucuns disoient que vû ces grandes offres, le roy les devoit accepter: mais il se voulut bien montrer vrai fils de l'Eglise, et ne voulut pas préférer l'avarice et l'interêt à la libéralité, et à la loyauté, en disant que puisqu'il qu'il l'avoit fait livrer aux gens du pape, et qu'il lui en avoit accordé la délivrance, il vouloit tenir sa parole, et qu'il seroit bien joyeux que le saint siege en s'it son prosit, et en pût tirer quelque avantage. Il sut donc mené à Avignon; et de là il sut mis sur mer, et conduit à Rome. D'ailleurs, le grand maître de Rhodes poursuivoit aussi de sa part qu'il sût mis ès mains du saint siege; et par ce moyen il sut sait cardinal, et obtint de grands priviléges et biens pour tout l'ordre de saint Jean de Jerusalem. Le roy sit au reste très bien entretenir et traiter l'ambassadeur du Turc, et celui du roy de Naples, qui le conduisoit, et les sit désrayer, et leur sit de beaux dons.

Vol. V.

TEXTE DE CAOURSIN.

Zyzymy Rex legatos mittit Rhodum.

Ittit a itaque rex Zyzymy Rhodum legatos: ad quos prius literas dederat, sed nuncium terrestre iter agentem: regis Bagyazit milites intercipiunt. Legati Cilicie littoribus rhodiam biremem casu repertam conscendunt: rhodumque navigant. Interea navigium apud ea littora stationem habens Zyzymy conducit, ut si casus exegerit: repente eo conscenso saluti quoquo modo consulat. Legati ubi rhodum appulerunt: jussu equitum magistri Petri d'Aubusson senatu coacto in hanc loquuntur sententiam.

Oratio legatorum in senatu Rhodiorum.

Precellentissime princeps et magister: prestantissimique equites. Nobilissimus adolescens ac sublimi loco natus Zyzymy rex: othumannides maximi regis nepos. splendidissimi imperatoris filius: ac potentissimi tyranni germanus, adversis rebus ad tempus cedens: cupit ad te sapientissimum principem et victory 3 miossimum riosissimum magistrum. vosque fortissimos athletas: confugere, quorum prudentia confilio atque ope: rebus affi ctis mederi possit. Quam propere mittendam classem esse petit: que ipsum excipiens Rhodum deuehat. fidemque publicam implorat: qua tutus in vestram ditionem pateat aditus. hoc loco referre non libet: que vestros quidem prestantissimos animos persuadeant: regium adolescentem: non reiciatis Nobiles viri estis: et multa prediti prudentia. satis superque intelligitis : quanti ponderis existant postulata et quot vel quales fructus inde excerpi poterint. Scimas enim vos preclarissimos viros armis asuetos: res magis quam verba impellere : quare prolixiori sermone suauistimus aures non obtundemus. Potentissimum regis natum: ad vos accedentem (licet profugum) ne floccipendatis. Indecorum enim ellet afillum regi claudere, quod vel homonciis: et pusilis semper patuit. Celebre quidem est vestrum (apud exteras nationes) nomen: quod et caucalos montes transcendit et indos penetravit. Quin armis vim repellere non ignorat : et profugos fouere afilo tutissimo non fastidit generosus vester animus. Littere in senatu recitate : diem postulant.

² Cette relation a été imprimée à Ulme en 1496 ; on a suivi ici l'ortographe et la ponctùation de l'original.

Senatus consultum.

LEGATIS curia exclusis: magister, patres quoque de re consultant et multa mente agitant. que modo suadent: ut regem Zyzymy excipiant. modo: ut reiciant impellunt. Tandem ex rationum controuersiis (seu ex calculorum collisione ignea scintilla) una resultat sentencia: decernuntque regem excipiendum alendum atque souendum: quia ejusce eventus occasio christiane religioni profutura sit. Intromissis legatis: senatus consultum editur. actis gratiis: petunt. ut res quantotius parentur: ne mora discrimen afferat.

Classis paratur: et Ciliciam nauigat ad Zyzymy deue-

Oneraria igitur nauis triremes: nauigiaque parantur, prefectus infiguis eques defiguatur: qui classe confeenfa clara militum hierofolimorum comitatus caterua in Ciliciam nanigat. vbi illic appulit : rex Zyzymy nauigium de quo supra mentionem fecimus : citato equorum curfu vrgentibus germani militibus iam confeenderat fama est cum a tittore paululum elongaretur: perbreuem quidem epittolam Zyzymy conscripfisse & ad fratrem dedisse : quam sagitte innoluit nexuitque: & fitico arcu in terram contorfit. exceptam esse ferunt epistolam a fratris militibas qui regium iquenem persequati tunt : & fratri redditam : quam ubi germanus perlegit: parumper lacrimatus est. animoque consternatus diu filuit : & aditu prohibito papilione le continuit, egre certo tulit, quod frater mahumetee legis cultor (quod permaximum crimen mahumetei ducunt) ad christianos confugerit. ad eos presertim qui othumannidum familie infenfissimi fuere: & genitorem grauiori affecerunt ignominia quodque fratrem christiano adherentem nomini. legi mahumetee grauissimum afferre posset dedecus, quorum se conscium prositetur: qui tanta atrocitate sit eum persequutus. Series epistole: fuit.

Rex Zyzymy Rhodiorum classem confcendit.

Usi nunciatum est: rhodios sui causa advantasse. firmatus animo: nauim conscendit. & hierosolimorum equitum sidei: sete credit. Nauis presectus: Regulum othumannidem humanitate honore obsequioque prosequitur. littora patrii soli linquens: & paternum auittumque regnum deserens rex. turbato animo aliquot siluit horas: mente postmodum recepta. navis presectum: his alloquitur verbis:

Zyzymy classis perfectum alloquitur.

NEDUM ago tibi vir illustris gratias: verum habeo ingentes. cumulateque redderem si sors a sublimi loco me non deiecisse. Quod me destitutum prosugum animo extorremque tanto zelo afficias. Sed ab ingenuis visceribus magnanimoque: non nisi illustria proficisci poterunt. generosi quidem sunt: qui te ad me excipiendum miserunt. tu quoque ex coetu eorum nobilis es et vir dignus, qui mandata exequi accurate pro tua innata prudentia & scis & studes. Non possum tamen non parum admirari : quod tanti affectus iudicium in me exhibeatur, qui ejus natus sun : qui seuicia crudellitate ac immanitate (dum spiritus alebat artus) rhodios persequutus est. in quo : & tuam & tui principis ac senatus rhodiorum nobilitatem predico, prudentiam admiror simul & magnanimitatem (que iniurarum obliuiscitur) extollo Si res prospere succedent : tanti quidem in me officij memorem & gratum intelligent rhodii. Cui ait : classis capitaneus.

Responsio capitanei.

CLARISSIME princeps: hoc a natura illustrioribus animis datum est. vt soleant precellentes viros: honore afficere digno. tu qui summo loco natus es: quamvis profugus & extorris contemtui tamen non esse debes. Id quippe vilium hominum censetu r: qui nonnisi bene fortunatos colere sciunt. At magnanimi viri quos virtus aut sanguinis prosapia illustrat : vel hostes armis positis reuerentur colunt atque observant. Te excipimus ut hospitem : non hostem. hospitis quidem iura : non hostis sequimur. Nec enim mirari licet: quo te affectato corde prosequimur. cuius genitor: seuo rhodio persequutus est odio. Pater tuus legis mahumetee secs tator : quod sibi cordi est molitus. Nos vt hostipro virili parte constanter arma obiecimus, licet caduca quedam terrena & vilia prostrarit : que quantotius erecta sunt glorie tamen famam quam nulla oblitterabit etas: rhodiorum nomini attulit. namque omnis rhodiorum victoriam e celo demissam nullo tempore reticebit. Leonis profecto brutorum principis animalium mos est: prostratis blandiri seuaque animalia grauiori imbuere ira. Milites quoque christi: leonis mores imitati, qui ad eos amice confugiunt : humanitate excipiunt. qui seuicia vtuntur: Arictos gladios fortiter objiciunt. Pompa

Pompa qua exceptus est a Rhodiis rex Zyzymy.

INTEREA Regis aduentu nunciato: parantur que pompe deceant. struitur ad mare ligneus pons: qui descendentem excipiat regem: pontis enim longitudo in mare protensa decem fere passuum fuit. latitudo quatuor : quibus equo gradu plures incedere possent. attrebatum pannis auro argenteo ferico lanaque contextis: pro gallorum belgarum more (qui huiusce artis inuentores & peritiores putantur) pons ornatur. via enim qua pedum vestigia incedentes premerent: thurcorum pictis tapetis sternitur. vici qua parte eundum fuit : mirto floribus suauem quidem odorem spirantibus respersi ac varietate sunt distincti. Primores ac plebeia gens que ad spectaculum conuencrat: vias obsident. Matrone ac nupte innupteque puelle : ad fenestras se-Reliquum vulgus tecta confeendit : vt venientem conspiciant regem. Nauim ante portus hostium anchoris linbnixam Rhodia triremis propinquans: regem excipiens ad pontein vehit. Premissi sunt prestantes fenatorii ordinis equites : qui Zyzymy descendentem confalutent. Hos sequitur longus famulorum ordo: infignis magistri redimitorum gallicos cantus vibrancium. deinde iuuenes prime lanuginis milites hierofolimitani: lucentibus equis insidentes. Torque veste sericea & splendido ornatu: distincti incedant. Magistrum post hos infignis vehit sonipes: spumancia frena mandens. Aureis fibulis phalerisque ornatus: qui hynnitum sepius edens. superbe graditur : vt ne quidem magistro quempiam adherere laciniori incessu permittat. Senatus quidem gravis : equis vectus subsequitur. Edem sancti Sebastiani foro sitam de industria magister non transit : illucque obuiam venit rex Zyzymy. superbo insidens equo : fidis comitatus profugis. Postquam màgistrum rex conspexit: ter digito labellum compescuit, qui mos est barbarorum principum: cum mutua reuerencia sese afficiunt. Magister autem pro more principem reueretur. Reddita falutatione dextras iungunt. & per interpretem confabulantes : ad edes equitant paratas. Ubi ad palacia francorum equitum (magnifice ad hec ornata) ventum est eo dimisso magister suas edes petit. Rex vero ex equo in pedes sese agiliter excipit: ac duorum medius thurcorum honoris causa vinas sustentantium scalas conscendens penetralia ingreditur, barbaricoque sago abiecto: lectisternio pro thurcorum more flexis poplitibus sedit. Ea die artubus sale tabentibus: quies data est.

Zyzymy ad Magistrum verba.

POSTRIDIE eius diei: magistrum coram alloquitur rex his verbis. Prestantissime magister inclitissimeque princeps: germani seuicia me persequente. cumque sors eo me redegisset: vt aduersis cedere quam in fortunam conari falubrius visum esset. multa menti occurrunt : huc atque illuc animum convertens ad quos confugerem non fatis prospicio. Demum tu preclarissime athleta occurristi: subijtque mentem tui quidem nominis sama percelebris. que nedum christianos: verum exterorum fines & víque ad indos penetranit. Accedit ad hoc fidei integritas: animi generofitas mentifque magnanimitas. qua tu: tuique commilitones prediti funt. Preterea precellentis triumphi gloria : quam (obfidione qua genitor meus Rhodios oppugnauit) adepti estis illustre quidem facinus: othumannorum familiam (supra octingentos annos tropheis trumphis atque ouationibus celebratam) virtute vestra propulsasse, ingenti itaque tue virtutis admiratione allectus: te tuorumque militum cetu m. nedum dilexi verum amaui colui & magnifeci. Vestre quippe: virtutis tante sunt vires vt nedum sue gentis: verum exterarum nationum animos alliciant. Nec parum attulit mihi fiducie: quod tu christianorum principum fauorem gratiamque haud immerito complecteris. Et per te : tui quidem nominis splendor in orientem late diffunditur. Nulli certe minum videri debet : si personam tue sidei crederemus, qui magnanimus & sapientissimus genitoris preteritas iniurias paruipenderes: & filium tiranni ad te confugientem. non contemneres: verum confilio auxilio atque prefidio foueres. Sed tacitus forsitan cogitas: quo iure cum germano germano de regno hic contendit qui minor est natu. Fateor fratrem prius in lucem prodisse: hac quoque ratione imperio exclusum iri contendo. Patre enim genitus est non rege: qui (nondum principatum adeptus) ipsum genuit. Possideat igitur: quorum pater (dum eum suscepis) potitur. Ego vero a patre rege imperialibus infulis ornato: genitus natus educatufque fum. Nec patrem vidi cognoui atque colui : nisi regem imperatorem ac principem rerum potitum. Quo fit: vt optimo iure quod pater (cum me genuit) possedit: mihi debeant nato. At mittamus hec. Potuit ne me regno paterno auitoque prorfus expellere: & regio iuueni dignam portionem denegare? Regiam gazam : precellentemque supellectilem inuadere sibi a cribere ac diripere? Commilitones (vt mihi infensi essen:) donis corrumpere allicere atque mouere: & me ad interitum víque vrgere? O fratris seua crudelitas? O germani contumax tyrannis? O fanguinis ceca cupiditas? Pudet hec : de fratre queri. Sed quod non erubait : me paterna hereditate spoliare equum est me (iniuria spoliatum) coram his ad quos confugio haud verecunde conqueri. Qui enim medici operam petit : dolorem & vulnus detegat necesse est. Adte confugi Rhodiorum felicissime princeps : vosque amplector fortissimi milites. facessant igitur paterne contumelie: ad calamitatem (qua premoi) mentem conuertere velis inclitissime athleta qui hostium armis audes resistere: & principum calamitati scis subuenire. Percuciam quippe cum christianis perpetuum foedus : nec eos armis lacessere conabor: paternique imperij portione non indigna contentus : armis politis quiescam Nec immemor beneficiorum (a te fusceptorum) ero. Imploro tuum presidium. inuoco principum christiane religionis auxilium: vt & mihi & ipsis consulant germani seuiciam vindicantes. pro inimico amicum : pro hoste hospitem : pro infido fidum : R. P. christianorum vendicabunt. Rege filente: magister ita loquutus est.

Responsio Magistri.

VERBA tua illustrissime Rex: prudencia sunt plena. Quod me & rhodios equites tantopere laudaris: tue quidem quidem modestie ascribimus. Si quid enim glorie fame aut dignitatis in nostro relucet cetu : deo gratiarum infusori attribuimus. Ex cuius providentie fonte: cuncta manant fluunt ac deriuantur. Nec te moueat : quod christiani & cruce signati sumus. Rhodiorum quippe ciuitas cunctarum gentium asilum refugium & portus fidissimusest ad quam (patrum nostrorum memoria & tue gentis & aliarum non contemnendi principes) qui confugere: gratiam cum humanitate reportarunt. Nec enim decet generosos animos : cum de foedere agitur hostilium armorum reminisci. Si genitor fuit acerrimus Rhodiorum oppugnator: putauit sue legis decori id conducere. Egit vt hostis: nos autem vt hosti gladios objections. Deus tandem clementissimus justiori fauit parti: & victorie angelum rhodijs mittere dignatus est. Tu ut hospes amicusque accedis: jura quidem hospicij benivolencie ac dilectionis prebeamus decens est. bono ac erecto sis animo: pro virili parte rerum euentui consulere, quodque tibi & nomini christiano conducat: exequi non paruipendemus quantum & ingenioli: & fortunarum facyltas suppeditarit. Romanus quidem pontifex : reges potentatusque catholici. Qui religionis christiane tenent gubernacula: potentia sapientia ac propensiore in R. P. christianorum voluntate perditi funt, qui tui aduentus occasione frui scient : te non deseremus, sed nos huic cause: propicios comperies. Placuitque plurimum tui iuris fummam intelligere : vt iuste cause inniti videamur. Grateque sunt oblationes: que non nisiab animo grato & generosa mente (que omnem respuit ingratitudinis labem) proficiscuntur. dictis regeque falutato edes reuisit.

Confultationes Rhodiorum.

Totis diebus frequens senatus cogitur: vbi sapientissima consultatione res agitantur. Placuit tandem principi ac rhodiorum senatui: in eam quoque sententiam cunctorum animi inclinantur ad Romanum pontissem imperatorem reges & principes catholicos: literas dari nunciosque mitti, qui regis Zyzymy ad rhodios consugium nuncient: oportunitatemque a Deo oblatam fignificent, quo. R. P. christianorum: consuli possii. Optimumque visium est: vt prosugus princeps sub tutela magistri & rhodiorum equitum ad occiduas migret prouincias. Facto S. C. litere nuntijque expedientur. Ac nauis oneraria paratur que regulum deuchat, cujus conductores depurantur presi antes rhodiorum milites: qui kalendas septembris M cocc laxxij. Navim conscendentes portu seliciter soluunt. Ea quoque pompa & ornatu: quo Zyzymy vrbem introiuit. Postquam dies duo & quadraginta moram traxisset: Rhodo discessit.

Guillelmi Caoursin Rhodiorum vicecancellarij de admi lione regis yzymy in Gallias & diligenti custodia asservatione: exhortatio.

NULLUS est orthodoxe sidei tam imbecillis cultor: qui pro virili parte aggredi non debeat quod christiani nominis honori salutique conducat. Etsi corporis vires non suppetunt : voluntas tamen merito adsit. in qua vera solidaque virtus locata est. Haud igitur absonum erit: si ab ignauo pusilloque ingenio viro Quedam dicuntur. que fortassis: sapientum illustria ingenia & potentum manus excitent. Hinc christi zelus digini nominis amor: in ecclesiam catholicam affectus haud temere mouit. Hinc deflenda orientalis plage labes: immaculatarum animarum lapíus. fcelerum atrocitas: promere impellit que ingenioli debilitas; balbuciens lingua tremulaque manus edere possit. Arduum est enim quod aggredimur: egetque precellenti intellectu viro. qui eloquentia suasione atque exhortatione prestet: & auditores facile moueat. Durum quippe est etate nostra (mundialibus curis implicitis) catholicis persuadere: vt que nostri maiores parresque ex incuria perdidere christiane religioni reintegrentur. Jampridem plerique viri doctrina & dignitate pollentes: operam pariter & industriam his in persuadendis perdidere. Loquutiores quoque habiti sunt: quo labores & impendia subire suadent. nec propterea desistere cepto decreui: si vel VOL. V. mihi mihi temeritas aut infania ascribatur, perspicaci quidem fapientiflimorum iudicio doctorumque feuero examini editionem submittens: dicendi initium aggrediar. ingeniorum profunditas: quod ex proditis equum redolet libat fastidiatque quod inconcinum absurdum atque iniulsum conceperit. Si animo destinauerim iacturas clades strages & ignominias describere: quas christiano nomini mahumetes thurcorum princeps (qui nuper e vita excessit) crudeliter attulit. Nec vires nec tempus: nec dicendi facultas certe suffecerit. tyrannus Nerone crudelior. Rege Affuero: potentior. Ac Holopherne est proteruior. Imperia enim duo: Regna non pauca. validissima que diciones: mahumetee legi subegit. Potentissimasque ac preclarissimas vrbes: tributum subire compulit. In qua quidem atrociori perseguutione scelerum tam immensa colluuies nata est. Ut ea Nec mens excogitare Nec lingua promere Nec Calamus exarare poterit. Que terso grauique stilo plerique doctissimi: toti orbi nota reddidere. vt juperfluum fuerit: nunc dicendi latissimum campum ingredi. Presertim: quod in animo est deuotas men-tes. attrocitate non afficere: nec obductum vulnus refricare, verum pro ingenioli facultate : ab omnipotenti deo oblatam oportunitatem. [mperialis Constantinopolitane vrbis sedem : vniuersamque greciam (que europe portio est) subigendi & in christianam potestatem redigendi demonstrare intendimus. modo adsit: qui voluntate sapientia & potestate fruatur. sine quorum sædere: nullum perfectiom proderit opus. Libet enim paulisper mente coniectari : que causa fuerit tantarum cladium enormitas. Quique am seuus immanis scelestus ac prepotens vir : tam insignes victorias sit assequutus. Nec id: qui tunc rerum gubernacula tenuerunt : ignauie ascripserim: quam permulti accusare nituntur. Potissimum fuisse iudico: mahumetis illius mirandam inauditamque obedientiam. Cui nec pufillo nec magno in ditione sua degenti: refragari fas fuit. At tremebundi attonitique dicto parentes: vel interitus pericula non formidarunt ut omni studio principi parerent: Nec fuit qui de throno imperij cum eo contenderet.

quippe

quippe turpiter occifis: aut veneno enectis, qui thronum conscendere congrentur: ditionis imperique monarcha colitur, nec audet aliquis ceruicem erigere : fed pauidi ad tyranni pedes procumbunt. Hinc oritur insolentia: hinc potentia: hinc obedientia nascitur: hinc fines ampliandi cupido incessit. & dum longinqui prinatarum rerum studiosi) thurco vicini sidei tuitionem credunt : horrida fanies nos inficit. Est profecto othumannorum domus inter mahameteos illustrissima: tyrannis semper referta christianis molesta & formidolosa. Atque postquam ysthmum asie minoris (sub heraclio principe: pipino rege apud gallias regnante) intrauit: grandes iacturas attulit & mahumeteum cultum auxit. Potuit enim parua manu extingui : cum in principatus exordio locata est. Sed paraipenderunt : qui enses ei obicere potuissent. Sicque torpentibus animis: pedetentim traiecto helesponto Europam adijt, in qua haud incelebres ditiones: fuo adiecit imperio, ad postremum quoque etate nostra: imperialem patriarchalemque sedem sue fecit ditionis. Post cuius expugnationem : vicinis ac infulis presertim thodiis cruce signatis molestisfima habita est. quos etiam denincere extinguere atque proterere: conata est. At divina pietas christi veros athletas: a tyrannidis iugo protegit. Cujus repulse ignominia affectus: draco ille scelestissimus mortem obijt atque damnatam evomit animam. O immenfa: dei clementia. O in crutabilis : sapientia. O inuicta: potentia, que mira veteris legis renouans : inauditum edidit miraculum, potentissimum quidem ditissimum a. trocissimumque christicolarum perseguutorem: putillo principatui & cruce fignatorum cetui fubicit. Quem quoque validissime vrbes triumphatorem conspexere. clara rhodus : victum pressum & tandem ignominia repulle affectum ridet, dignata quidem est diuina potestas etate nostra ostendere: quam vile quam imbecille quam eneruatum sit thurcorum fetidum nomen. vt christiam norum animos: pristinis iacturis attonitos erigeret consolaretur ac solidaret : deuotasque mentes augeret. adexercitus comparandos. Qui Bitantium & Europamhaud indignam fitus & orbis portionem (mahumetea po: Z 2 lutione) lutione) liberent. Debuit certe Rhodiorum insignis victoria (diuinis miraculis redimita) fideles animos mouere: ut vniverfo fædere iuncti in nephandum draconem vires inflaurarent. At rejecto divino fuafu tabefeit humana potestas: nec audit mouentem mundi creatorem. Qui pulsans iterato: haud paulopost terremotibus in Afia & Rhodo editis. crudelem tyrannum Rhodijs minitantem: Jam iamque imminentem, vt exofam fibi vrbem peffundet. Repentina etenim morte occidi permittit. Hine oritur in asia europaquoque thurcorum tumultus: potentum simultates germanorum nepotumque tyranni dissidia: imperij thronum appetentium. Germanique Bagyazit & Zyzymy: mutuis cladibus fele consiciunt. Que res maxime christianam potentiam excitare potuit. vt vindictam de tyrannica domo fumeret: & ab Europa tyranni iugum excuteret. Dormit etiam latina potentia: nec pulfanti deo creatori aditus patuit. Communeque bonum: priuato affectui algore regens occidua fortitudo: postponit. O quam dura est presens etas : O quam tarda. O quam lenta : minori certo de causa nostri maiores illustria aggressi funt facinora. & infignem triumphum: quandoque de barbaris fidei hostibus reportarunt. Erat quippe in eis christi sanguis seruentior : qui precordia commouit impulit atque roborauit. Non enim misericors deus cordis ferrea duricia commotus: illustriori occasione christicolarum mentes hortari statuit. Qua permittitur fraternum dissidium diuturnius prestare : ne aut vi aut dolo aut toxico interiret. Noui quidem thurci : qui nunc bilancijs imperat. frater Rex Zyzymy: (omni presidio destitutus) ad Rhodios confugit : ab his quoque qui patri infensissimi fuere. & qui potentiam eius retruserunt: tutamen presertim implorans. Prestat enim profugo clarissimus Rhodiorum Magister vitam : quem a furore gladij fraterni eripit fouet nutritque suis opibus. Ut superstes frater terrori anxietati atque tremori fratri fit imperitanti. Agendis quoque prudenter consulens principem namque Zyzymy in occidentem misit : ne fratri propinquus imperitanti vim dolos & insidias ejus subiret. felix quippe profugium : quod apertam opor-

tunitatem

tunitatem (Res aggrediendi preclaras) affert. Non est enim qui ignoret : quantas clades & ruinas, ciuium di.cordia. affinium diffidium fraternumque odium imperiis ac regnis Reipublice attulerit. Sacre quidem gentiliumque litere: huius labis referte funt exemplis. Nec enim nostra etas: horum haud expers censetur. Non certe aliter Romanorum R. P. (olim potentiffima) interijt. Nec secus Achenarum ciuitas aratrum passa elt. & Grecorum imperium christum colens: non multos exactos annos hoc affectum malo prorfus occidit. enim: sapiens quidam. Concordia parue res crescunt. Discordia: maxime dilabuntur. Saluator quoque noster summa veritas : id explicans ait. Omne regnum in se diuisum : desolabitur. Hinc orta est (strenuissimi thurcorum ducis Achmat Basie ydionti expugnatoris) nex repentina: cuius tanta fuit infolentia procacicas & audacia. Ut non nisi assiduo cogitatu: ytaliam attingere cupiuerit. Eoquidem superstite: numquam erant vicini quieturi. ingentesque clades: minabatur sese Erat profecto animo audacissimus manu promptus valido corpore armorumque peritus : qui numquam quiescere affueuerat. Hunc quidem terrore fraterni profugij: Nouus thurcus impulsus dolo necari justit. Hinc quoque commilitorum satellitumque noui thurci lateri adherentium: conspiratio tumultusque nascitur. Qui sui principis somnolenciam fastidientes: Regis Zyzymy defiderio ducuntur. Hinc opum profusio editur: vt sibi animos nouus thurcus alliciat. Hinc assidua: in Europe portione (que sibi paret) atque afia trepidatio, tantaque inquietudine ac terrore thurcus afficitur: vt iamiam germanum imminere adesse & aggredi sese putet. Nec vigilijs nec somno: aliud cogitat aliud voluit aliudque videt quam Zyzymy Regem. Hinc illud infigne inauditumque monstrum natum est: ut thurcum non puduerit. quadraginta milia nummum auri Rhodiorum magistro triumphatori Petro Daubuffon mittere. pacto inito: vt germanus attentius (ne sibi molestie terrorique sit) asseruetur. Princeps quidem potentissimus terrore fraterno impulius: Rhodiorum magistro tributi conditione sese reddit ob- Z_3 noxium.

noxium. O dei inscrutabilis: providentia. O incnarrabilis: institia. O ineffabilis: bonitas, crudelissimi quidem tyranni opulentissimus potentissimus superbiffimus natus: Rhodiorum principi crucefignato aureorum pactorum vectigal foluit apud quem germans vitam fouet: quem tanto amore nephandus genitor prosequitus est. formidolosus quippe Bagyazit terrore perculfus statim fredus cum vicinis percutere non distulit. Rhodiosque illustriori fædere insignit : equis quidem conditionibus pactis. Nec audet trepidus Bagyazit: exercitus in christianos parare c'assem instruere ensemque obicere, ne germanus adsit : latinorum manu suc-O quam preciosum profugium: O quam illustre exilium. O quam infigne regis Zyzymy confugium quod tantam attulit latinis commoditatem quietem & honorem. Ex quibus certo facile quis viderit (mentis tamen caligine prius abducta) quanta sit (ab omnipotenti creatore) oblata oportunitas Constantinopolim & Greciam recuperandi: latinorumque ditioni redintegrandi. Si modo pronior voluntas. potentiam & fapientiam fibi copularit. vtinam adessent illi : qui olim tanto animi ardore barbaros pessandare cogitarunt. quique nulla porrecta oportunitate graui vero difficultate: magna funt aggressi: assequerentur certe nunc quod optarunt. Sic Ludouicus fanctus Francorum rex: fic perillustres alij principes qui sepius graui incomoditate: ab illustrioribus bellis sunt retracti. Auim affirmare. Si parua classe Zyzymy vectus adsit. & non numerosus terrestris exercitus (qui danubio traiectu) feruiam intret: thurcorum potentia europa discedet. Si enim minoris asie fines: profugus rex Zyzymy tetigerit. Repente Bagyazit qui nunc imperat (helesponto transmisso) europam terrestribus christianorum copijs patentem deseret: vt germano se obiciat. Ita haud difficulter: europa mahumetea secta liberatur. Sunt enim hec haud obscura: qui orientem: & thurci fines accolunt ejusque mores noscunt. Sed qui longo situs tractu a nobis distant: nugas fabulasque commentari nos putant. Quicquid quoque dicimus: questus gratia dictum arbitrantur. Sunt quippe auro fulciti:

sub deauratis tectis latentes delicatisque cibis nutriti: qu thurcorum horrida non gnorunt arma. Rerum enim affluentia: non finit hec prospicere Non defint quoque inuidi quidam : mordaci dente hec deprauantes & quod mirabilius deteriusque existit : pacta pecunia cum thurco initoque confiio. Regen Zyzyny: ftudiola attentione toxico enecare conantur, vt fubla a a deo oportunitateque data: nouus thurcus in regni folio firmetur. Cogitetque stabilis & intrepidas: permagnas vires in christianos exercere. Quas germano superstite manuque Rhodiorum afferuato: fopitas effe necesse O scelus: inauditum. O atrox: iniquitas. detestanda: inuidia. horum qui hemani hostis inuitatione fugestioneque dyaboli : christianorum rempublicam turbare subuertere ac enervare student cupiuntque ac expetunt. Nec aduertunt sese primum interituros: & exterminium perpeffuros. Si Rabidus canis (fratre sublato) insolescat: animum refocillet vires refumat mentemque recipiat. Obcecata quidem mens turrita superbia: alterius gloriam videre nequit. veniat in mentem : exterminium strages iacturaque. Quam priscis illis temporibus: Bothi Uvandali Huni. strenuissimi quidem barbari. latino nomini attulerunt. Quod profecto principum tenebrole illius etatis : ignauia inuidia dissidioque contigit. Reuoluant hortor hystoriarum celebres libros: claraque monimenta & qua rerum qualitate verfamur : compertum habebunt atque conspicient : quantam deus sit elargitus gratiam quam pertinaci animo non noscunt & audire fastidiunt & queque (in hanc sententiam) deuota mente prolata : in reprobum interpretantur fensum. Has igitur insidias : prudentissimus Rhodiorum magister subtili ingenio ab emulis excogitatas sentiens. Arbitratus quoque principem Zyzymy tutius apud gallias defendi custodiri atque protegi. Quibus certe preest Rex christianissimus : qui catholicam fidem gratia & presidio (maiorum exemplo) prosequitur. vbi & summa sinceraque viget religio: fidesquoque relucet orthodoxa: vbi monstra non gignuntur: ubi carent infidijs ac vbi toxici tabes ignoratur. His causis suasus in franciam Zyzymy Regem mittit, vt roboilissimis (cruce fignatis) comitibus succinclus: opido hierofolimorum in ampliffimo francorum Regno sito afferuetur. Sed non defuit commentum: quod principem Zyzymy regno interdiceret. nec ei pateret aditus : constitutione regia (vti accepimus) refragante. Que Mahumeteos Judeos alienosque (ab fide catholica) viros regno excludit. Heu grauem Sortem: Res vero quidem equa I sta memoraturque digna. Devoto catholicoque regis christianissimi pectori: vt indigna vt abfurda & vt iniqua proponitur nec clarissimi facinoris circunstantie qualitates atque modi: fincere funt explicati. Quis enim velit (presertim hierosolimorum ordo: qui precipuum erectorem protectorem auctorem francorum regem colit veneratur observat) immaculatum integerrimumque regnum obscenis moribus inficere? Quis cupit : regie constitutioni aduersari ? Quis desiderat : rem atrocem committere? Nullus profecto sane mentis: id excogitarit. Non erit quippe in gallijs: Zyzymy sempiterna mora. Sed ad tempus: quo rebus christianorum consuli possit. non erit cum gallis viris integerrimis & omni immundicie labe puris : Zyzymy commercium. Non erit quidem cum incolis affiduitas : non erit cum habitatoribus familiaritas quandoquidem in secessiu concludetur: castelli muris cohibebitur paucis comitatus satellitibus. Aderuntquippe eius custodie milites rhodii: qui constantes eorum pravitatem contemnunt & rident. Non debet quidem Gallia hunc rennuere expellere atque contemnere: cuius asseruatione tantum decus tantum comodum & tantum vtile emanare potest. Nec dubitamus pijssimum regem ac tapientissimos doctiffimosque ejus regni viros: haud aliter sentire. Si modo huius principis statum intellexerint. Maior quippe comoditas christianis affertur Zyzymy fouendo protegendo & asseruando: quam inclitissimo regno arcendo propellendo nec non & excludendo. Nec enim regis constitutio: nec conditoris intentio infringitur. vbi tam clarum facinus tam grande emolimentum tamque insigne monimentum: ex admissione in regnum oritur. Si autem aditus in franciam Zyzymy denegatur: exultabunt infidiatores toxicorum portitores ficarii nephandique fatellites. qui diffimulato habitu iussu thurci: nephandorumque virorum sue factionis passim vagipalantur. vt Zyzymy: vel gladio necent. uel rapiant vel veneno interimant. Excipe excipe nobilissima gallia & rex pijssime virum illustrem: nobilissima mahumeteorum familia natum. Qui tanta comoda: christiane religioni est allaturus. Qui germanum magnum thurcum : christicolarum finibus ar cet. Qui fratrem bifanciorum imperatorem : tuo quidem regnicole splendidissimo Rhodiorum magistro submissum reddit. Qui passionis domini nostri ihesu christi monimenta: reliquia que in Constantinopolitana subversione raptas. & a thurco expugnatore ex industria custoditas heredique nato dimissas: daturum elargiturumque se magistro pollicetur. Qui tantorum scandalorum: extinctio censetur. Qui quietem christiano nomini prebet vide ne eum repellas: qui repulsus scandalo & iacture futurus sit. Si aditum prohibeas: adsunt famelici ac lupi rapaces qui regium iuuenem deuorent lacerent atque opprimant, quo sublato Bagyazit thurcorum rex cornua erigit : Rhodios persequetur. Italie imminebit : hungarosque invadet. Et qui modo timidus stupidus ac tremebundus pauet iacet atque latet? repente erumpet infaniaque infolescet, etiam certe animum augebit : sublatusquippe tremor terror ac formido erit. Ex quibus tot gravia tot horrida tot enormia subsequentur : que narrare nemo quidem poterit. Taceo vrbium subuersiones: & iuuenum sidei abnegationem. phanorum folutiones: virginumque prostitutio-Quorum preserite clades : testimonium perhibent haud incertum. Caue toto orbe dignissima gal-lia: triumphis ac tropheis priscorum gloria clarissima. Ne tua laudata constitutio: tantorum malorum causa sit. Non fuit profecto legislatoris intentio bonum laudabile ac preclarum edicto excludere: quinimo pessimis viris ac sceleribus regnum purgare. At ubi tantum eminet bonum: in thurci scilicet ad tempus exceptione lex quidem merito atque regia constitutio cedere debet.

debet. Que servata: grande quidem scandalum chrisliano nomini sit allatura, damnant certe iura diuina pariter & humana iura luxuriam inconcessosque concubitus: prostibula tamen permittuntur, ne maius sequatur malum: omnia equidem turbentur libidinibus. Moysesquoque libellum repudij permisit: vt homicidium vitetur. duellum quoque conceditur : si ex eo publicum fequatur comodum. Tollerantur plerunique nonnulla quamuis non equa: ne gravius ingruat ma-Qui profecto rei publice preficitur : licitum est minora permittere mala ne maiora contingant. At dices facienda non funt mala: vt eueniant bona, fateor quidem : si de bonis & malis spiritalibus intelligas suppositum. At si de temporalibus siat comparatio: minora sequi certe mala ratio suadet. Rarus quippe & scenici conferendus qui minimum spiritale bonum eligit: vt maximo temporali incomodo afficiatur. Nec prauum simpliciter dixerim: Zyzymy excipere regnoque admittere. qui tanta diligentia asseruabitur: ne iniquum afferat exemplar. Exceptio namque hec & legis infractio: non quidem malum moris ac spiritale censetur. nam nec iuri diuino nec iuri communi refragatur. Sed regie constitutioni : edictoque prouinciali repugnat. Quare prouinciale malum potius dici poterit. Nec enim omnes christicole a tuis ditionibus: Judeos & ab fide alienos excludunt. Respondere profecto conor debilius quam necessum sit : his qui exceptioni regiam constitutionem obiciunt. Sed non aduertunt : que (ipfam observando) contingant scandala. Ordini presertim Hierofolimorum : qui Rhodijs imperat. & Francorum regij dyadematis prefidio: ad hanc nostram etatem defensi protectique sunt. Gravissimum quidem scelus est scandalum: ex quo sepenumero nephanda: sequuntur si non cauetur modestia. Doctor quidem gentium Paulus apostolus Thymoteum circumcidit: ne conuersis iudeis scandalo sit. Quedam quoque legis mosaice iam sopite cherimonialia sequutus traditur ad tempus: vt scandalum vitaret. Scandali namque tabes: enormitatum fomes est. Sed forsitan quis dicet: fides publica Zyzymy data arcte eius custodie repugnat. minime minime quidem: fides namque data Zyzymy regem rhodiorum magistro audientem futurum policetur. Confilioque eius potiturum: nec priuatos appetitus sequuturum. Exceptus enim non est rex Zyzyniy: vt christiane religioni aut rhodiorum statui obsit officiat damnumque afferat. Ipfum certe profugum a naufragio a mortis discrimine a germani sanguinolentisque manibus : precellentiflimus magister eripit servat atque defendit. diffonum quippe & a ratione prorfus alienum fi quos fautores & vite tutores sentit cladem afferat. Terendum quidem tempus & rebus maturius confulendum : donec etas quietior tranquillior ac feraentior reddatur : Et qui dissident virtute : fruantur optata. Nulla fiquidem ex eius custodia oritur pecuniaria vtilitas: quamuis ampla fit penfio. prodigum est ac profusum id hominum genus : multoque cibo infignique supellectili vtitur. multasque impensas eius custodia affert : in educandis qui sue afferuationi incumbunt, sui etiam causa legationes ad thurcum & eius ad nos sepius mittuntur: que amplos fumptus faciunt. Honor quidem comodum vtilitus etiam fidei ac reipublice christianorum: ad seruandum iuuenem nos compellit. donec qui cuncta prouidet ex eius alta specula christianorum tepidas mentes inflammet : vt expeditio in fidei hostem instauretur. Si christicole oblatam spernent occasionem: ingratitudinem certe nephandam non feret Deus. luentque penas quandoque: qui conatus qui fanctum propolitum: quique res propicias iniquo disturbant ingenio. Si interierit: aut manus hospitalariorum rex Zyzymy (quod Deus auertat) effugerit: tunc liquido patebit : quanto nunc fruimur bono. Quod pauci quidem gnoscunt: plurimi ignorant, perplures certe: vt iniquum facinus opprimunt damnant & fastidiunt. Docte ac fidelis lector: tuo qui perspicaci in genio de paucis plura coniectare poteris. & pro intellectus acumine diiudicabis: si equum sit regie constitutioni inherere ac Zyzymy repellere. vel constitutionem rectius interpretando flectere: & Zyzymy admittere & in regnum introducere. Propositis quidem duobus: que mali speciem induere videntur secundem sapientis sen-

285

286 DISSERTATION on ZIZIM.

tentiam, minus malum reiecto maiori est eligendum. Si quid acrius quam decuit dixerim aut inconcinum quidpiam edidi vel absurdum connexui, parce precor qui lectitas imbecilli ingenio: quod pondus tanti negocij sufferre & explicare non possit. Cedo tibi excellenti ingenio doctori: qui poriora acutiora & prudentiora excogitabis, que deuntas mentes: non ambigo in nossitum alliciant tententiam, valent felix: quicumque perlegerit. Datum Rhodi, xiij, kal, octobris anno incarnationis christi. M.cecc.lxxxiij.

End of the fifth and last Volume.

INDEX

Aron Raschid, (the caliph) permits the French, out of regard to Charlemagne, to visit the holy sepulchre, vol. i. page 11.

Abasides, (the caliphs) their origin, i. 109. establish themselves at Bagdad, ibid. are acknowledged for the lawful successors of Mahomet by all the Mahometans of Asia, and chiefly by the Selgeucidian Turcomans, ibid. their schilin with the Fathimite caliphs, 110. are likeways acknowledged in Egypt, on the extinction of the Fathimites, ibid. Saladin invested with this authority, ibid.

Abdi, commander of the Ottoman squadron, presents himself before Malta, v. 199 writes a very haughty letter to the grand master, ibid.

Abubeker preferred to Aly in the succession to Mahomet, i. 9.

Abulabbas, founder of the dynasty of Abasides, which settled at Bagdat, i. 109.

Achmet, Solyman's general, is fent to the affiftance of Mustapha, iii. 258. revolts, and proposes a league against Solyman, 259. et feq. is discovered and betrayed, 262.

Achmet Geduc demands a reparation of Mahomet II. for the injury offered his wife by his son Mustapha, iii. 34. upon the death of Mahomet II. prevails upon the army to declare in favour of Bajazet, iii. 78. defeats the army of Zizim, 80. is sent out against him a second time, and is victorious again, 84. is appointed a commissioner to treat of a peace between the grand seignior and the knights of Rhodes, 89. expresses his resentment at the terms agreed on, 93. put to death by Bajazet, 94.

Achimat, the eldest son of Bajazet II. his character, iii. 140. the affection of his father for him occasions the destruction of them both, ibid.

Vol. V. Aa Acre

Acre befieged by the infidels, vol i. page 158. recovered by the Christians, ibid. again befieged by the infidels and taken, 165.

Acre, (the bishop of) disputes with the knights of St. John upon the right of tithes, i. 273. addresses himself to the pope upon the occasion, 274. is obliged to desist from his pretensions, ibid

Adhad, the last of the Fashimite caliphs, strangled by Saladin, i. 125.

Admiral, a dignity of the order, fixed to the language of Ita'y, iii. 14

Adrian IV. (pope) approves the treaty concluded between Raimond Berenger and the templars, concerning the execution of the testament of Alphonsus I. i 69. resules to recall the privileges of the hospitallers, 91.

Adrian VI (pope) receives advice of the loss of Rhodes, iii 2 6 his attachment to the interest of Charles V. draws reproaches upon him, ibid. grants a bull to the grand master, 238. declares against France in favour of the emperor, 246. falls ill of an ague as soon as the ceremony was over, 247. receives the grand master of Rhodes with great tenderness and affection, 248. his death, 249.

Africa, a city of Africa, its lituation, iv. 103. Dragut feizes it, 106. is belieged and taken by the army of Charles V and the knights of Malta, iii. et feq. and offered by that prince to the order, 221.

Agatha, (the fort of St.) built by order of the grand master Lascaris, v. 129.

Agnes, a roman lady, prefides over the hospital at Jerusalem, appointed for the reception of women, i. 33.

Agosta quite overturned by an earthquake, v. 171. and repaired by the grand master Adrian de Vignacourt, ibid.

Aiazzo. a city of Cilicia, in the harbour of which the Egyptian fleet is routed, iii. 172, et feq.

Airadin, lord of Tagiora, undertakes to drive the knights of Malta from Tripoli, iv. 59. suffers loss in

the

INDEX.

the expedition, and returns, vol. iv. page 70. is driven from Adabus, where he lay intrenched. 62.

Aladin, general to the caliph of Egypt, fortifies Jerusalem against the Christians, i. 33. defeated by Godfrey of Bouillon, 35.

Alarcon, a Spanish officer, entrusted with the keeping of Francis I. at Madrid, and that of Clement VII. at Naples, iii. 287. refists the folicitations of cardinal Colonna, 288.

Albano, (the cardinal of) made head of the army of the Crufade, as the pope's legate, i. 244. occasions the loss of the Christian army, 247.

Albany, its situation, ii. 257. the revolution that happens there, ibid. et feq.

Albi, (the chevalier of) fets fail for Rhodes with the knights of Castile and Portugal, iii. 242. his arrival prevented by the Algerine pirates, who fall upon him at sea, ibid.

Albigenses, their original, i. 225.

Alcantara, (the order of) the grand mastership of it is annexed to the kings of Spain, i. 97.

Alcoran, variety of schissins arising from the different explications of it, i. 110. ii. 267, et seq.

Alençon, (the dutchess of) is conducted into Spain by the grand master, iii. 2711 returns into France, 274. Alexander III. (pope) calls the third general council of

Lateran, i. 103. makes up the difference between the hospitallers and the templars, 141.

Alexander V. (pope) elected at Pifa, ii. 219. applies himself to form a league against the Turks, 220. and to put an end to the division in the order of St. John, ibid. his death, 223. John XXIII. his successions.

for is suspected on that account, 224.

Alexander VI. buys the popedom, iii. 107. shuts up Zizim in the castle of St. Angelo, 108. puts his life to auction, ibid. prepares himself against the arrival of Charles VIII. and shuts himself up in the castle of St. Angelo, 110. comes to an agreement, and promises to deliver up Zizim, 111. but first causes him to be poisoned, vol. iii. page 112. invades the privileges of the knights of Rhodes, 115. forms a powerful league against the Turk, 116. applies himself to raise the fortune of cardinal Borgia his son, 119. his death, 125.

Alexandria taken and plundered by the grand mafter Berenger and the king of Cyprus, ii. 149. who are afterwards obliged to abandon their conquest, 150.

Alexis, the greek emperor, deals deceitfully with the princes of the crusade, i. 28. enters into a screet treaty with the Sultan Solyman, 29.

Alexis Comnenus, fon to the emperor Isaac Angelus, solicits the princes of the crusade to make war upon the usurper Alexis, who had dethroned his father, i. 2:1. by their assistance overcomes his opposers, and is made partner with his father in the empire, 213. is dethroned, and murdered in prison. 215.

Algiers invaded by the Barbaroffas, with subjection to the grand seignior, iv. 34. an unfortunate expedition of Charles V. against that city, 80.

Alice, the youngest daughter to Baldwin II. king of Jerusalem, married to Bohemund prince of Antioch, i. 51. after his death sets up for herself, 59. is expelled the city by her father, and obliged to retire to Laodicea, ibid. a conspiracy formed in her savour, 61.

Alice, second daughter of Isabella, and the count of Campaigne her third husband, marries Hugh of Lufignan king of Cyprus, i 219. claims the crown of Jerusalem, 270. her descendents pursue her pretended right, 319.

Allemand de Chateau-noir, brother Albert, grand commander of Cyprus, favoured by the grand mafter

Fulk de Villaret. ii. 104.

Alphonfus of Portugal choien grand maîter of the order of St. John, i. 197. endeavours a reformation of the order, 199. abdicates his dignity and retires to Portugal, 200.

Alphonfus I. king of Navarre and Arragon, makes the hospitallers and templars his heirs, i. 66, dies in the combat

INDEX.

combat against the infidels. Troubles on occasion of the execution of his testament, vol. i. page 65, et feg.

Alvarez de Sande disuades the viceroy of Sicily from fending succours to Malta, v. 35. commands the regiment of Naples in the reinforcement sent to Malta, 55. presses for an engagement with the Turks, 60. makes a furious charge upon the insidels. 62.

Aly nominated by Mahomet to be his succeffor, i. 9.

Amaury, (prince) chosen to succeed his brother Baldwin III. in the throne of Jerusalem, i. 106. his character, 107. enters into a treaty with Sannar sultan of Egypt, 113. forms a design to conquer Egypt, 115. draws over the Greek emperor Manuel Comnenus to join in the project, ibid. enters upon the expedition, and takes Pelusium, 120. consents to a treaty of peace, 121. is obliged to retire with di grace, 122. applies for relief to Manuel the emperor of Constantinople, and attends upon him in person, 127. dies, 133.

Amaury, a clergyman in the diocese of Chartres, the founder of a new tect, i. 224.

Amboife, (Emeri d') is chosen grand master, iii. 123. the marks of Charles VIII's esteem for that prince, 125. holds a general chapter, 126. causes the order gain several advantages, and likeways a naval victory over the sultan of Egypt. 124. his death, 126.

Amee V. count of Savoy, falfly reported to have preferved Rhodes from falling under the Ottoman power, ii. 60.

Amurath I. brother and successor of Solyman, his great conquests, ii. 155. he is stabled by a flave, 173.

Amurath II. eldeft fon to Mahomet I. succeeds him in the throne, and restores the Ottoman empire to its former splendor, ii. 235, turns his arms against the princes in the Morea, and the isles of the Archepelago, 236, declines to enter into any negociation with the knights of Rhodes, 245, consents to a renewal of the ancient treaties of peace, 257, his quarrels with the king of Albania, ibid, marches at the head of a powerful army against Scanderbeg, vol. ii. page 259. lays siege to Croia, the capital of Albania, but without fuccels, 260. his death, ibid.

A a 3 head

INDEX.

Amurath, son to Zizim, turns Christian, and is supported by the knights of Rhodes, iii. 139. attempts to escape with the grand master upon the loss of Rhodes, but is prevented by the vigilance of Soliman's spies, 230. discovered, owns himself a Christian, and is publickly executed with his sons, 235.

Andrew, king of Hungary, undertakes the crusade, i. 234. commits the regency of his kingdom to the palatine Bachannus, 235. is admitted as a brother into the order of St. John of Jerusalem, 240, gains a victory over the insidels, and returns into his own country, 241, et seq.

Andrew d' maral, commands the gallies of the knights of Rhodes against the sultan of Egypt, iii. 133- demands the dignity of grand master, and is refused it, 147. takes up a resolution to destroy the order, 143. presses the grand seignior to bessege. Rhodes, and offers him his tervice as a spy, 149. opposes the preparations made by the grand master for the desence of Rhodes, 159. stirs up the Italian knights to a disobedience to the grand master, 164. charged with having made a salse report to the council, concerning the quantity of powder contained in the town, 188. gives notice to Solyman of the weakness of the best ged, 207. his treachery discovered, 208. hanged and quartered, 210.

Andrew Doria, prince of Melphi, commands the emperor's fleet against the Turks, iv. 18. lays siege to Coron, 20. and takes it, 21. besieges Patras, and carries it, ibid. the Turks attempt to recover Coron, and are deseated by Doria, 22. what motives determined him to desert the king of France and go over to the emperor, 76. is made generalissimo over all the sleet of the Christian league, 77, draws over the Venetians to the imperial side by a stratagem, ibid endeavours to divert the emperor from his African expedition, 80. is sent against Dragut, 101. lays siege to Monester and takes it, vol. iv. page 108. is ordered by the emperor to pursue the conquest of Africa, ibid. forms the siege, 111. and takes the town, pursues Dragut by orders from the emperor, 122. desires the assistance of the gallies of the order, 124. Andrew Doria, nephew to the late prince of Melphi, offers to transport 2000 men to Malta, till the forces of the king of Spain could be got together. v. 15. is deluded by the viceroy of Sicily, ibid. proposes to fit out all the naval forces of the king of Spain, and give battle to the Turks at sea, but is over-ruled, 35.

Andronicus, the greek emperor, refuses to assist the hospitallers in the conquest of Rhodes, ii. 49. sends a body of troops against them, 52.

Andronicus murders his prince, and sets up for emperor, i. 211.

Anjou, (Charles count of) brother of St. Lewis, embarks with him for the crufade, i. 297. his pretentions to the kingdom of Jerusalem, 319. sends a lieutenant into the holy land, ibid. causes seize the goods of the hospitallers who had not joined him in that quarrel, 320. the Sicilian Vespers put an end to his pursuits, 323.

Anne de Montmorency, marshal of France, marches out of Rome to a considerable distance, to receive the grand master, iii 247.

Anthony Fluvian. or de la Riviere, made grand master of the knights of Rhodes, ii. 233. puts out a sleet to sea, in order to oppose the designs of the grand seignior, 236. mediates a peace between Sultan Daker and the king of Cyprus, but without success, 237. supplies the Cypriots with succours, and prevails upon the imprisoned king to purchase his liberty at any rate, 239. opposes the sultan's designs against the order, and restores a regularity in discipline, 240. his death, 244.

Antioch, a city of Syria, taken by the crufade, i. 32. retaken and tack'd by Bendocdar Sultan of Egypt, 315.

Antioch, (the patriarch of) excommunicates count Bohemund III. for adultery, and lays the kingdom under an interdict, vol. i. page 142.

Antonio di San Martino, defends himself before the grand mafter from the charge of having neglected to fend fuccours to the relief of Rhodes, iii. 241.

Antonio de Toledo, a candidate for the dignity of grand master of Malta, is set aside for his virtues, v. 73.

Aqueduct made at Malia, v. 104.

Arach, a strong place in the frontiers of Arabia Petræa.

belieged by the Turcomans, i. 130.

Aramon, (Gabriel d') ambassador of Henry II. to the Porte, is defired by the grand mafter d'Omedes to repair to the Turkish sleet before Tripoli, to hinder the fiege of it, iv. 147. is unfuccefsful, and detained by Sinan the basha, 151. procures the liberty of the governor and some other prisoners, 165. returns to Malta, where the grand master d'Omedes throws. disadvantageous suspicions upon his conduct with the Bashas, 160, passes to Constantinople, ibid, the king demands justice of him, and obtains it by the industry of Villegagnon, 177, et feq.

Araschid, one of the eldest sons to Muley Mahomet, implores the protection of Barbarossa against his younger brother Muley Haffan, iv. 37. is carried to Constantinople, and arrested in the seraglio by order of Solyman, ibid.

Ardinel, (the castle of) taken by the gallies of the order, iv. 21.

Armenians, Christians by religion, but schismatics, their errors, i. 128. acknowledge in appearance the authority of the pope, 222. are affifted by the hofpitallers against Solyman the sultan of Iconium, ibid. Arnaud de Comps, elected grand master of the order of St. John, i. 108.

Arpajon, (Lewis viscount of) a fine action of his, v. 125.

Arsenal built at Malta, v. 170.

Artois, (Robert count of) embarks with the king St. Lewis his brother, for the crusade, i. 297. declares himhimself for the siege of Grand Cairo, his opinion prevails, vol. i. page 300. forces the intrenchments of the Saracens, 301. refuses to hearken to the remonstrances of the two grand masters, and the count of Salisbury, 304. is surrounded by the enemies, and killed, 305, et seq.

Ascalon, the key of Palestine to the Saracens of Egypt, i. 64. their school of war, ibid. besieged by the Christians, 81. and taken, 84.

Ascanio del la Corna, advites the sending of succours to the knights of Malta, v. 36. his advice prevails, 37. is appointed major-general, and lands in Malta with the Sicilian succours, 58. advises the waiting for the coming up of the enemy in their camp, but notwithstanding marches out with the rest, and fights in the first ranks, 61.

Asia, the state of it at the institution of the order of the hospitallers, i. 2. et seq.

Associated and passes of the Market of the hospitallers, his character, i. 116 gets the council to approve the enterprise of Amaury against Egypt, 117, borrows great sums from the banks of Florence and Genoa, to defray the charges of the war, 118. abdicates his dignity for shame of his bad success, 123. embarks at Jassa, and passes into France, ibid. perishes in his passage to England, 124.

Assassins, a fort of banditi seated in the mountains of Phænicia, i. 130. the original of the word, 131. are subjected to pay tribute to the templars, 1,2. offer to become Christians upon their releasement from the tribute, and are ill treated by the templars, 133.

Aubusion. (the commander of) obtains affiliance of money from Charles VII. is made overfeer of the fortifications of the isle of Rhodes, iii. 24. is sent into the isle of Negropont to the affishance of the Venetians. 26. becomes grand prior of Auvergne, and at last grand master, 36. his chief cares, 7 he prudently decides some disputes with the Venetians, 39. ransoms some prisoners, 40. calls a general chapter, and orders all the knights to repair to Rhodes, 42.

agrees on a ceffation of arms with Mahomet II. vol. iii. page 44. makes an advantageous treaty with the fultan of Egypt, and the king of Tunis, 46. is vested with the fovereign authority, 48. provides for the defence of Rhodes, 40. his descent, 50. at the request of the council confers the chief command of the armies on Anthony d'Aubusson his elder brother, ibid. signalizes himself for courage and prudence in the fiege of Rhodes, which he forces the basha Palæologus at last to raise, 56, et seq. enters into a league against Bajazet II. 82. grants Zizim an affylum in Rhodes, 85. from whence he persuades him to pass into France, his motives therein, 90. enters into a negotiation with the Sultan, og, what use he made of the power he had over the person of Zizim, 101. agrees with Innocent VIII. to cause conduct him to Rome; the articles of the treaty, 103. his consternation at the news of the death of Zizim, 112. is defired by Charles VIII to conduct him in his enterprise against the Turks, ibid. causes complaint to be made to the pope by Ferdinand king of Arragon, 115. Lewis XII. by an obliging letter, perfuades him to enter into the league against the Turk, 117. banishes the Iews from the ifle of Rhodes, 119, writes sharply to the pope, whole injustice towards the order was now beginning again, 121. dies for grief that he had not been able to prevent it; his character, ibid. reflexions on his fucceffors, 122.

Auger de Balben, chosen grand master of the hospitallers, i. 102. composes the difference between king Amaury and the lords of Jerufalem, 108. dies, ibid.

Avogadre, general of the gallies, deprived of his commission, and condemned to a year's imprisonment, v.

Aussonville, (the chevalier de) sues for succours to relieve Rhodes at the court of France, and obtains them, iii. 242 his fleet dispersed by a storm at sea, 242.

Auvergne, (the grand priory of) the prejudice done to the order in regard of that benefice, iii. 14.

B.

B Achannus, palatine of Hungary, made regent during the absence of king Andrew in the holy land, vol.

i. page 235. Stabs the queen for having affished in the ravishment of his wife, 238. is pardoned by the king, 242.

Bagdad taken by Togrulbeg, a Turcoman prince, i. 15. the ordinary refidence of the calif Abassides, 110.

Bajazet, fifth fultan of the Ottoman race, threatens Hungary with an invalion, ii. 173. his advancement to the throne, and conquests, 174. gains a victory over the Fiench, 183. turns his arms against the Greeks, and lays siege to Constantinople, 184. is opposed by Tamerlane, great cham of Tartary, 187. raises the siege to march against him, 190. comes to a battle, is deseated and taken prisoner, 193. insulted by Tamerlane, and kills himself, ibid.

his fons dispute the succession, 202.

Bajazet II son to Mahomet II. lays claim to the crown, iii. 78. is declared grand seignior at Constantinople, but opposed by Zizim his brother, 79. orders his troops to march immediately against him, ibid. offers to come to a composition with him, 81. marches against him in person, and returns victorious, 82. makes him other propofals, deligning to furprife him, 84. forces him to feek protection of the knights of Rhodes, 85. enters into a negotiation of peace with the grand mafter, 41. and concludes it, 92. causes Achmet the grand vizir to be put to death, 96. prefents the grand master with the right hand of St. John Baptist, the patron of the order, 99. lends an embaffador to Charles VIII. king of France, to folicit the giving up of his brother Zizim, 103. makes a yearly allowance to pope Alexander VI. for the imprisonment of Zizim, 108. follicits him to put him to death, 109. makes a fecret league with the fultan of Egypt against the knights of Rhodes, 126. fits out a fleet, which makes a descent on the isle of Lero, 129. and is forced to retire with precipitation by the artifice of Paul Simeoni, a young commander in the island, vol. iii. page 129 causes great preparations to be made in all his ports, 138. is obliged to suspend the execution of his project, by reason of some domestic differnions in his own family, 140. is possoned by his physician at the instigation of Selim his son, 141.

Balac, a Turcoman emir, takes the count of Edessa and the king of Jerusalem pritoners, i. 50. killed by Josceline de Courtenay, 53.

Balagu, bp. of Malta, opposes the grand master, v. 121. Balben, (Auger de) second grand master of the hospitallers, i. 102. assists at the council of Nazareth, and contributes a great deal to get Alexander III. acknowledged as lawful pope, 106. and Amaury as king, 107. dies very old, 108.

Bathiano, one of the principal defenders of the city of Candia when belieged by the Turks, v. 129. drives them from an important baltion, ibid.

Baldwin fucceeds his brother Godfrey of Bouillon, in the kingdom of Jerusalem, i. 41. after a successful reign of eighteen years, dies of a dilentery, ibid.

Baldwin du Bourg, count of Edessa, succeeds to the crown of Jerusalem, under the title of Baldwin II. i. 41. gains a victory over the Turcomans, and enters Antioch in triumph, 50. is taken prisoner by the enemy, ibid. is dismissed upon the payment of a ransom, 54. gains a considerable victory, ibid. makes new conquests, ibid. dies, 59.

Baldwin II. the third son to Peter de Courtenay, made emperor of Constantinople, i. 280. travels into Italy to implore succour, 281.

Baldwin III. succeeds his father Fulk in the throne of Jerusalem, i. 70. advances against Noradin, 79. lays siege to Ascalon, 81. succours Paneas, 93. surprised by Noradin, but escapes with the loss of his forces, ibid. gains a complete victory over him, 100. poison'd by a physician, 106.

Baldwin IV. succeeds to the throne of Jerusalem, i. 134. of an infirm constitution, ibid. surprises Saladine,

dine, and gains a victory over his army, vol. i. page 135. attempts to fortify a castle in Jacob's-ford, and is defeated by the insidels, ibid. nominates the young Baldwin his nephew to succeed him, 147. commits the care of the government to the count of Tripoli, ibid. his death, 148.

Baldwin V. dies within feven months after his advancement to the throne, and not without fuspicion of poison, i. 154.

Baldwin, count of Flanders, chosen emperor of Constantinople, i. 216. his death, 280.

Bannerett, magistrates of Rome in the absence of the popes, ii. 166. go about to re-establish the republican government, 173. after the death of Gregory XI. take violent measures for the election of an Italian pope, and the inthronization of Urban VI. 174. Barbacan, chief of the Chorasmins, invades Palestine,

i. 285.

Barbarossa, (Airadin) captain of the barbarian corsairs, puts to sea with a considerable fleet, iv. 23. seizes upon the kingdom of Tunis, and threatens Tripoli with a siege, 33. his birth and character, ibid. takes upon him the title of king of Algiers, and affociates himself with two famous pirates, whom he made his lieutenants, 35. makes war upon the knights of Malta, 36. takes Araschid, son to Muley Mahomet, into his protection, 37. carries him to Constantinople, and proposes to Solyman the conquest of Tunis, ibid. returns with an army, and enters Tunis at the head of 9000 Turks, 29. is acknowledged Solyman's viceroy, 40. draws over the petty kings of Afric to his assistance, ibid. prepares to oppose the emperor Charles V. who was marching into Africa, 43. takes the field, 49. is defeated and retires to Tunis, and from thence to the city of Bon, 50, 51. restores Dragut to his post, 100. found dead in his bed, 102.

Barbarossa, (Horruc) causes the king of Algiers to be strangled, and sets himself up in his stead, iv. 34. is Vol. V. Bb besseged befieged in the capital of his kingdom, vol. iv. page 34. cicapes with his treatures by a fubterraneous passage, is pursued and forced to fight, ibid. is cut to pieces with 1500 of his men. 35.

Barletto and St. Stephen (the priors of) defend themfelves from the imputation of negligence in procuring faccours for the relief of Rhodes, iii. 241.

Barres (William des) lord of Tiberius, enters into a league with the duke of Venice, and takes the city of Tyre, i. 52.

Beaulieu, or Belver, a religious house of ladies hospitallers, subject to the visitation of the grand prior of St. Giles, ii. 19. its origin, ibid. the commandress of it takes the title of grand prioress, 20.

Beersheba, rebuilt and fortified by Melesinda queen of Jerusalem, i. 64.

Bela king of Hungary, restored to his throne by the asfistance of the knights hospitallers, i. 289.

Belbeis, anciently Pelusium, taken from Sannar sultan of Egypt, by Siracon the general of Noradin, i. 113. the sovereignty of it promised to the hospitallers by Amaury, 117. is besieged, 119. taken and sacked, 120. the king restores it to the hospitallers, ibid. they are recalled from it, 122.

Belgrade besieged by Amurath I. and afterwards by his son Mahomet II. who are obliged to raise the fiege of it, iii. 5, et seq. again besieged by Solyman II. 146. its situation and fortifications, 147. is taken, 152.

Belle-fontaine, (the bailiff of) commander of the naval army, fignalizes himfelf, v. 195.

Belle-garde, (the baron of) although a secular, obtains the grand priory of Auvergne, v. 1 co.

Bendocdar, defeats Robert count of Artois, i. 305. advanced to the throne by the Mamalukes, 312. makes a bloody war upon the Christians, ibid. takes Jassa, the castle of Beausort, Antioch, and the fortress of Crac, 315. dies of the wounds he received in battle, 320.

Bene-

Benedict XI. chosen pope, and dies within eight days,

vol. ii. page 28.

Benedict XII. (pope) writes a letter of complaint to the grand master of St. John, reproaching the negligence of the order, ii. 122. forms the plan of a naval armament, to keep the sea against the insidels, 123. furnishes his quota, and sends them out to sea,

Bernard, a French monk, writes an account of his voyage to Jerufalem, i. 12.

Bernard, (St.) preaches up the crusade, i. 73.

Bertrand de Comps, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, i. 287. defeats the Turcomin army, and dies of his wounds, 290.

Bertrand de Got, archbishop of Bourdeaux, chosen pope by the secret practice of the king of France and cardinal Duprè, ii. 33. favours the French faction, and the Italians repent of their choice, 34. summons the two grand masters of the templars and the hospitallers to appear before him, 35. his dissimulation with regard to the affairs of the templars, 40. publishes a general crusade, and annexes plenary indulgences to it, 47. prosecutes the templars in conjunction with the king of France, 71. suppresses the order, 80. is said to have had a share in their estates, 91.

Bertrand de Texis, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, i. 268. re-establishes the emperor's authorize in Polosina 271. dies 281.

rity in Palestine, 271. dies, 281.

Bertrand made count of Tripoli, i. 41.

Biandra, (John of) prior of Lombardy, is made general of the Christian fleet, which takes Smyrna, ii.
125. loses that dignity by the arrival of the Dauphin of Viennois, 128. and recovers it by the credit of the grand master de Gozon, 132. gains a complete victory over the Turks near Embro, ibid.

Blanchfort (Guy of) is ordered to conduct the prince Zizim into France, iii. 91. becomes grand prior of Auvergne, vol. iii. page 102. and afterwards grand master, 137. is recalled to Rhodes, and dies by the way, 138.

Bohemia, (the grand priory of) restored to the order, v. 91. the emperor renews his pretentions to it, 93. the affair is concluded to the satisfaction of the order, 101.

Bohemund, a Norman lord, cuts his coat of arms into crosses, and taking the first himself, distributes the rest among his principal officers, i. 24. religns his rights of primogeniture to his younger brother, and engages in the crusade, 27. takes Antioch, 32. is made prince of the city, and takes up his relidence there, 28.

Behemund II. succeeds his father in the government of Antioch, i. 48. marries Alice, the second daughter to Baldwin II. king of Jerusalem, 55. dies, 58.

Bohemund III. succeeds in the principality of Antioch, i. 129. is excommunicated for adultery, 142. taken prisoner by the prince of Armenia, 200. is set at liberty upon conditions, which he afterwards refused to observe, ibid.

Boniface VIII. advanced to the popedom, ii. 13. takes the hospitallers and templars into his protection, 14. annexes the abbey of the holy trinity of Venufia to the manse of the grand master, 21. threatens to excommunicate the king of France, unless he will head the army of the crufade, 25. dies of grief, 28.

Borgia, (the cardinal of) a natural fon of Alexander VI. iii. 111. is given as a hostage to Charles VIII. and follows that prince into the kingdom of Naples, ib. is suspected of having poisoned Zizim, 112. raises his fortune above that of the greatest families in Italy, Bosio, commander and chaplain of the order of St. John, is sent to Madrid, iii. 256. returns to Viterbo to give the grand master an account of his negotiation, 257. is fent to Rhodes, 261. is dispatched by the council to the grand master, then in France, 271. passes with him into Spain, ibid. gives Charles V.

an account of the measures that had been taken to regain Rhodes, vol. iii. page 271. is sent into England, 279. is again sent to Rhodes to sound the dispositions of the people; 289. the discovery of his project exposes him to great danger, 293. proposes to the grand master the conquest of the city of Modon, which he himself goes to view, 294. is sent into Italy to forward the execution of the plan concerning Malta, 296. is entrusted with the instrument of donation, to carry it to the grand master, 299. dies by the way, ibid.

Bosio, (brother) is sent into Candia to levy soldiers, and get provisions for the order, iii. 160. engages an able engineer named Gabriel Martinengo, and arrives at Rhodes with his soldiers and provisions, 161. is named to the bishoptic of Malta by the emperor, iv. 14. but could not possess it till after the death of pope Clement VII 17, et seq.

Botigella, prior of Pifa, is victorious against Airadin, iv. 62. deprived of the employment of general of the gallies, 64. returns from his government of Tripoli, and advises the order to give back the place into the emperor's hands, 74.

Botoniates, (Nicephorus) dethrones the emperor Michael Ducas, and is himself dethroned by Alexis Comnenus, i. 13.

Boucicault, (the marshal of) contributes to the bad success of the league against Bajazet, ii. 177. made governor or viceroy of Genoa, 207. lands at Rhodes in his way to Cyprus, ibid. makes some conquests on the coasts of Syria, 209, consents to the treaty concluded between the grand master de Naillac and the king of Cyprus, ibid. again cruites along the coasts of Syria and Palestine with the grand master, 211. is opposed by the Venetians, 213.

Bourbon, (the constable of) over-runs Italy with his army, and lays fiege to Rome, iii. 285. is flain by a musket shot, 286.

Bb3 Branden-

Brandenburgh, (the bailiff of) embraces Lutheranifin, and is cited before the council of the order, vol. v.

page 93.

Brienne, (John of) his character, i. 219. Philip Augustas being defired by the Christians of Palestine to give them a king, caules him to espouse Mary queen of Jerusalem, ibid. arrives at Acre with 300 knights, 226. wastes the frontiers of the country, and is obliged to retire, asks affiltance of pope Innocent III. ibid. prevents the befieging of Acre, with the kings of Hungary and Cyprus, 242. re-establishes the castle of Cesaria, ibid. supported by the crusades, goes to fit down before Damiata, 243. separates himself from the beliegers out of a pique against the legate, 245. affifts at the affembly of Terentino. 252. gives his only daughter in marriage to Frederic II. and refigns in his favour, the authors of that negotiacion, ibid. traverses Europe to promote the crusade, 252 commands the army of pope Honorius III. against his son-in-law, 263. is called to Constantinople to take upon him the regency during the minority of Baldwin of Courtenay; his gallant actions not withstanding his great age, 281, et seg.

Burfa, the capital of the empire of Bajazet, ii. 175. taken from the Moguls by his fon Johna, 233.

C.

CAir-beg, governor of Egypt, refuses to join with Gazelles, governor of Syria, in his insurrection against Solyman, iii. 143.

Calatrava, desended by the abbot of Fitero and his vas-fals, i. 96.

Caliph, the title of Mahomet's successors, i. 9. the succeis of their arms, 10.

Caliph of Egypt, enters into a league with the princes of the crusade, i. 30. deserts his engagements, 32. enters Judea with an army, and invests Jassa, 51. his army routed, and his steet destroyed, ibid.

Calix-

Calixtus III. (pope) engages the princes of Europe to enter into a league against Mahomet II. for the defence of Hungary, iii. 2.

Camel (Melic-el) fultan of Egypt, calls his brother the fultan of Damascus to his affistance, i. 244. proposes advantageous terms to the Christians, 245. lays their army almost under water by opening the banks of the Nile, 247. makes a truce for eight years with them, ibid. his generosity towards Frederic II. with whom he makes a truce for ten years, 265.

Campson Gauri, sultan of Egypt, enters into a league with Bajazet against the knights of Rhodes, iii. 126. assists the king of Calecut against the Portuguese, 127. sends certain vessels to sea to make an attempt upon the isle of Lango, which are taken by the order, 128. resolves to augment his naval force, 132. enters into a league with the king of Persia against the Turks, 141. is defeated by Selim, and the empire of the Mamalukes entirely destroyed, ibid.

Canalé, commander of the Venetian fleet, shamefully abandons the Christians, iii. 27.

Candelissa, lieutenant to Hassan, viceroy of Algiers, his education and character, v. 17. assists in the attack of the peninsula of Malta, ibid. et seq. his behaviour in the siege, 19. is put to slight, 20.

Candia, (the island of) the retreat of the knights of St. John after the taking of Rhodes, iii. 232.

Candia, the capital city of the island of that name, befieged by the Turks, v. 129. the commander Balbiana makes himself master of an important Bastion there, ibid. divers reinforcements arrive thither, 156, 157. is at last taken, 158.

Canea, taken by the Turks, v. 126. unsuccessfully befieged by the Allies, 170.

Cara Mustapha, appears with the Turkish sleet before the island of Gelves, iv. 251. makes great havock among the Christian ships, 252. lands his troops and lays sleege to the fort, 253. takes possession of the place, demolishes the fortifications, and returns to Constantinople, 254. is made general of the land forces in Solyman's expedition against Malta, vol. iv. page 273. appears before the island, and resolves to begin the flege of the town at the post of Castile, 284, et feq. takes a view of the place from mount Calcara, 286. holds a council of war, 287. resolves upon the fiege of fort St. Elmo, 288. opens his trenches, 280. determines to come before it with all his forces, and give a general affault, 312. is forced to retire, 314. resolves to erect a battery upon mount Calcara, 216. makes another storm, 218. and takes the fort, 321. fends an officer with a white flag to the gate of the town to propole a negociation with the grand master, v. 4. is disappointed, and orders his troops to invest the castle of St. Angelo, 5. forms a project to cut off the communication of the befieged with the fea, and shut them up on all sides, 8. fails in his design, 12. fires upon them from all his batteries together, 13. receives fuccours from Algiers, and comes to a long and bloody engagement, 16, et feq. renews the affault, and instead of Algerines, fends on the Janizaries against the befieged, 24. not disheartned with difficulties, 25. calls an extraordinary council of war, and refolves upon a general attack, 28, is repulled, and renews the affault, 30. orders a retreat to be founded upon a mistaken supposition of the arrival of the Sicilian succours, 32. omits nothing that may promote the carrying on of the siege, 33. gives the signal for an assault by the general discharge of his batteries, 41. attempts another ftorm, which was his twentieth, but without success, 43. leads on his troops in person against fort St. Michael, 46. resolves as a last struggle to attack the notable city, 50. disappointed in all his projects, 52. raises the siege and embarks with precipitation, 58. lands again with his forces, 50. is defeated and flies to his ships, 62.

Capfa, a commandery founded by the grand mafter Heredia, ii. 171. whose body is interred in the church there, ibid.

Carac,

Carac, a fortress situated in the entrance of Arabia, vol.

i. page 145. why the sultans of Egypt resuse to give it up to the Christians, 245.

Carracciolo, (Richard) grand prior of Capua, is substituted in place of Heredia, by Urban VI. ii. 178. founds the monastery of St. John at Florence, 170.

Caraffa, (Gregory) is chosen grand master, his first concern, v. 165, et seq. would have entered into a league against the Turks, 166. his death and character, 168.

Caramanian, prince of Cilicia, experiences the fury of the arms of Amurath II. ii. 235.

Caramandre, (Boniface de) chosen lieutenant general of the order by pope Boniface IX. ii. 171.

Cardinals, are advised by pope Gregory XI. when at the point of death, to distrust the pretended revelations with which they had been amused, ii. 173. elect Urban VI. through the violence of the bannerets, after taking authentic instruments, 175. elect Clement VII. at Fundi, 177. oblige every new pope to promise to renounce the popedom, 218. assemble a general council at Pisa, ibid. elect Alexander V. 219. elect Martin V. at Constance, after the three competitors had resigned, or been set asset 228.

Cardinals, make large promises concerning the crusade, but do not keep them, i. 175.

Cardinal's hat, why refused by the grand master de la Valette, v. 67. is accepted by the grand master de Verdalle, 99.

Caretto, (Fabricius) commander of the language of Italy, distinguishes himself at the siege of Rhodes, iii. 60. is made admiral and procurator general of the order at Rome, 137. and at last grand master, 139. holds a general chapter, ibid. makes a league with Ishmael king of Persia, 141. assists Gazelles in his revolt against Solyman II. 143. fortises Rhodes, 146. his death and character, 147.

Cassiere, (John de la) of the language of Auvergne, grand master, v. 87. a new promotion made in the dignities of the order under his government, ibid.

filences

filences the murmurs of some knights, vol. v. page 90. restores the priory of Bohemia to the order, 91. opposes the designs of the bishop of Malta, 92. demands justice of the pope, who takes cognizance of the affair, ibid. et feq. a conspiracy formed against his life, of which some knights are accused, 93. the council too rifes against him; upon what pretences, ibid. is suspended from his function, 04. is arrested, os. refuses to be re-established by force, 96. the king of France promises him his protection, ibid. arrives at Rome, ibid. re-established in his dignity, and dies at Rome, 97. his epitaph composed by Muretus, ibid.

Castriot, (John) king of Albany, treats with Amurath II. to whom he gives his children as hostages, ii.

257. what became of them, ibid. et seq.

Celestine III. (pope) publishes a new crusade, i. 195. Celestine V. (pope) the manner of his election, ii. 11. refigns the papacy. 13. is dispatched by ill usage, 14.

Chapters, general ones of the order of St. John, viz. At Montpelier, held by the grand master de Villan-euve, ii. 111.

At Rhodes by the grand master de Pins, 147. At Rhodes by the lieutenant of the grand master d'Heredia, 178.

At Valence, &c. by the grand master d'Heredia, 160.

At Aix by three different priors, 221.

At Rhodes by the grand master de Naillac, 232.

At Rhodes by the grand master Fluvian, 240.

At Rhodes by the grand master de Lastic, 252.

At Rome by the grand master Zacosta, iii, 22. At Rhodes by the grand master des Ursins, 35.

At Rhodes by the grand master d'Aubusson, 41.

At Rhodes by the grand master Caretto, 139.

At Viterbo by the grand master de l'Isle-Adam,'289. Charles, duke of Anjou, lays claim to the kingdom of Jerusalem, i. 319.

Charles l' Aleman de la Roche Chinard, grand prior of St. Giles, employs the profits of his priory in the defence and service of the order of Rhodes, iii. 135.

Charles

Charles V. (emperor) folicited to grant Malta and Goza for a place of residence to the knights, vol. iii. page 256. his character 267. orders the revenues of the knights in Italy to be seized, 269. reverses his order, and promises them the isle of Malta for a settlement, 270. attempts to feize upon the person of the dutchess of Alençon, who narrowly escapes him, 274. railes a civil war in the pope's territories, 283. keeps the pope a prisoner in the castle of St. Angelo, and orders public prayers to be made for his liberty, 287. grows jealous of the knights of Rhodes. 201. fets the pope at liberty, 293. propotes a marriage between Margaret of Austria, his natural daughter, and Alexander de Medicis, 296. grants the isles and castles of Tripoli, Malta and Goza, with all their territories and jurisdictions, as a fief noble, free and frank, to the order of St. John, 298. by a new treaty allows them to export corn from Sicily without duty, and to coin their own money, 305. nominates Thomas Bosio to the bishoprick of Malta, iv. 14. is opposed by the pope, who names cardinal Ghinucci for that employment, 15. takes Muley Haffen, the deprived king of Tunis, into his protection, 41. endeavours to bribe Barbarossa, and draw him off from Solyman, 42 refolves to march into Africk at the head of an army, and invites the knights of Malta to affift him, 43. lands his army within cannon shot of the fort of Goletta, 44. and takes it, 46. gives orders to march towards Tunis, ibid comes to a battle with Barbaroffa, and gets the victory, 50. restores Muley Hassen to his throne, and embarks for Europe, 53. sends assistance to him against his rebel subjects, 71. lays siege to Buda, 78. carries his arms again into Africk, and falls upon the dominions of Barbarossa, 80. lays siege to Algiers, 81. fultains a confiderable loss at sea by a storm, 85. raises the siege, and reimbarks with his forces, 88. is folicited by the knights of Malta, either to put Tripoli into a state of defence, or give them leave to abandon it, 91. orders Doria to clear the sea of Dragut, vol. iv. page 101. sends him into Africk to recover the places which Dragut had taken, 106. orders him to go in search of Dragut, and fight him at any rate, 122. orders the viceroy of Sicily to pay extraordinary honours to the grand master of Malta, 218. proposes to him to remove the convent to Mehedia, and make it their settled habitation, 219.

Charles VII. king of France, assists the king of Hungary against the Turks, iii. 3.

Charles VIII. king of France, refuses to give up Zizim to his brother Bajazet, iii. 104. interests himself in Zizim's preservation, with a view to his own advantage, 106. raises a considerable army, which frights the pope and the Italians, 108. passes the Alps, and enters Italy without any opposition, 110. accomodates matters with the pope, 111. invites the grand master of Rhodes to consult with him upon his dedesign of invading Greece, 112. lays aside the project, and returns into his own dominions, 114.

Charlotte de Lusignan, lays claim to the kingdom of Cyprus, iii. 8. is obliged to quit her dominions, and retire to Rhodes, 11. has still an interest in the isle of Cyprus, 38. her adherents driven out of the country, ibid.

Chateau-neuf, (John de) commander of Usez, gives up to the order certain isles, of which he was bailiff.

iii. 7.

Chatillon, (Renaud de) a foldier of fortune, privately marries the princess of Antioch, i. 145. a severe enemy to the Mahometans, 146. taken prisoner by the infidels, 163. his behaviour at his death, 164.

Christians, entirely expelled out of Palestine, i. 326. Church of St. Mary ad Latinos built at Jerusalem, and fupplied by Benedictine monks, i. 12.

Givita-Vecchia, the grand master de l'Isse-Adam is obliged to retire thither with the remains of his order, iii. 246. Clement VII. consents that the vessels of the order remain in the harbour, 254.

Claude

Claude de la Sangle, commands the gallies of the order against Dragut, vol. iv. page 107. reconciles the differences of the Christian generals, 110. erects an hospital in his tent for the cure of the fick soldiers, 114. elected grand master of Malta, 216. arrives in Sicily, and is honourably received by the viceroy, 217. lands in Malta, and is established in his authority, 220. gives audience to the emperor's embassador in full council, ibid. et seq. adds new fortissications to the fort of St. Elmo, the isse of St. Michael, and the town of Malia, 228. repairs the gallies that had been disabled by the storm, 230. dies, 234.

Clement III. (pope) nominates William archbishop of Tyre to be legate of the holy see, i. 176.

Clement V. chosen pope by intrigue, ii. 23. et seq. his character, 20. his agreements with Philip the fair, 31. his coronation at Lyons, 33. faults thrown up to him, 34. forms the project of a crusade, and orders the two grand masters to attend him, 35. communicates two important memorials to the grand master of the templars, 39. publishes a crusade for the conquest of the isle of Khodes, 46, et seq. grants feveral favours to the grand malter of the hospital. lers, 48. complains to Philip the fair of the impriforment of the templars, and procures them to be restored to their offices, 68. what measures he takes with that prince for their judgment, and examines some of them himself, 71. engages the other princes of Christendom to cause arrest them, 72. calls the council of Vienna, in which he declares the ororder extinct, 78. causes adjudge their effects to the knights of Rhodes, whom he promises to reform, 81. refers the judging of the grand master and the chief officers to two cardinals, 83. dies forty days after the execution of the templars, 86.

Clement VI. (pope) publishes a new crusade. ii. 123. Clement VII. nephew of Leo X. and successor of Adrian VI. his birth, his dignities, his intrigues to arrive at the popedom, iii. 249, et seq. his affection for the order of St. John, of which he had been a knight, Vol. V.

vol. iii. page 252. assigns to the knights the city of Viterbo for their residence, and gives the grand mafter great marks of distinction, 254. the latter proposes to him different projects for the establishment of his order, ibid. et feq. the pope pitches on the isle of Malta, 255. approves the grand master de l'Isle Adam's voyage into Spain, 269, becomes chief of the holy league; its fatal consequences to Italy, and himself in particular, 284. is made prisoner by the emperor, 286. the arrival of marshal de Lautree with a confiderable army, determines the emperor to fet him at liberty, 291, et seq. conditions of the treaty, after which he escapes by night in the habit of a merchant, 293. makes a treaty with the emperor; the conditions of it, 208, obtains from the emperor a donation of the ifles of Malta and Goza, and the city of Tripoli, in favour of the order of St. John, ibid. to whom he procures the peaceable possession of them, 300, et seq. nominates the cardinal Chinucci to the bishopric of Malta, and sustains his nomination, iv. 15. his gallies contribute to the taking of Coron, 18. and to the defence of it the year following, 21.

Cogni, or Iconium, (the fultan of) defends the city of Nice against the crusades, i. 29. treats with Alexis Comnenus, who sends him back his wife and children who had been made prisoners at the taking of that place, ibid. cuts in pieces the army of the christians, and implores the assistance of the neighbouring sultans, 30. ravages the county of Edessa, and takes young Courtenay prisoner, 79. is routed by the hospitallers, 223. is slain in battle by the hand of Theodore Lascaris, 278.

Coimbra, (the duke of) marries the heires of Cyprus, and is possoned by his mother-in-law's nurse, iii. 8.

the confequences of his death, 9.

Colonna, (Pompey) supplanted in the conclave by Julius de Medicis, his rival, iii. 249. deprived of his cardinal's hat by the person become pope, 284. solicites Alarçon to put him to death in prison, 288. Commanders fall into great remiffness, vol. ii. page 111. the remedy which the chapter applies to it, 112. most of them elude the orders of the grand master, 138. are ordered to maintain knights newly received, 242. some of them complain of the augmentation of the responsions, 253. which they are at last obliged to pay, 256.

Commendataria, and commandery, their original meaning, i. 311.

Commenus, (Emmanuel, or Manuel) brother-in-law of the emperor Conrad, betrays his army to the infidels, i. 75. makes a treaty with Amaury king of Jerusalem for the conquest of Egypt, 115, furnishes money for that purpose, 118. his fleet lost, 122. his affection for the Latins causes great troubles, 143.

Commenus, (Andronicus) brother of Manuel, causes strangle his nephew Alexis II. and seizes on the empire, i. 211. Isaac Angelus puts him to a cruel death, ibid.

Comnenus, (Theodore) seizes on Epirus and Albania, i. 278. arrests Peter de Courtenay, and puts him to death, 271. takes several places from Robert his son, ibid.

Comps, (Bertrand de) grand master of the hospitallers, dies of his wounds which he receives in a battle against the Turcomans. i. 29.

Comps, (Arnauld de) a gentleman of Dauphine, is chofen third grand mafter of the hospitallers, i. 109.

Conrad, emperor of Germany, undertakes an expedition to the holy land, i. 75. returns without fuccess, 77.

Conrad, fon to the marquis of Montserrat, defends Tyre against Saladine, i. 171. refuses to acknowledge Guy de Lusignan, and assists him against the insidels, i. 182. marries Isabel the youngest daughter to the late king of Jerusalem, and lays claim to the crown, 184. stabbed by two assists, and slayed alive. 192.

Conrad, fon of the emperor Frederic II. and Yolaut, only daughter of John de Brienne, is supported in Cc2 the fuccession to the kingdom of Jerusalem, in spite of the pretensions of Alice, vol.i. page 269. et seq. whose son Henry I. of Lusignan receives from pope Honorius III. the title of king, to his prejudice, 297.

Conservator, (grand) a dignity of the order annexed to the language of Arragon, iii. 14.

Constance, daughter to Bohemund II. succeeds her father in the principality of Antioch, i. 59. married to Raymond count of Poitiers, 63.

Confiant, king of Armenia, gains a victory over the Saracens, by the affiftance of the knights of Rhodes,

ii. 123.

Conflortinople, a sedition in that city against the Latins, i. 143. the crusaders make themselves masters of it, and re-establish Isaac Lange, who had been dethroned by his brother Alexis, 213. they again seize on the traitor Murzulphle, and the same Alexis, 215. and make Baldwin count of Flanders emperor of it, 216.

Corasimirs, invade Palastine, and commit great ravages, i. 283. make themselves masters of Jerusalem, 285. and gain a complete victory over the Christians, ibid. diffensions arise among them, and they destroy one another, 288.

Corcut, second son of Bajazet II. is set on the throne, iii. 79. his character, 140. is strangled by order of the sultan Selim his brother, 141.

Corinth taken and pillaged by the gallies of the order,

v. 103.

Corna, (Ascanio de la) is of opinion that affishance should be sent to the knights of Malta, v. 36. is made major-general of the army that was to have been sent thither, 55. is of opinion that they should wait the approach of the enemy, who had landed, 60. what share he has in the victory, 62, et seq.

Cornara, (Catharine) marries the Bastard de Lusignan, Cornillan, (Peter de) grand master, his character, ii.

139. reforms several abuses, ibid. replies to pope Innocent nocent VI. about abandoning the ifle of Rhodes, vol. ii. page 143. dies, 144.

Coron besieged and taken by the confederate army, v.

r66

Correa, a Portuguese knight of Malta murdered by the other knights, v. 89.

Cosino, duke of Florence, inflitutes the order of St. Stephen, iv. 154. kills his younger son Garsia with his own hand, for having murdered his elder son John, 256. endeavours to divert the thoughts of his missfortune by a close application to business, 257. orders his knights to join the gallies of the knights of Malta, wherever they should meet with them, ibid.

Cos, or Lango, (the island of) its extent and situation, ii. 55. is fortified, 56. the commander of that island is obliged to maintain 25 knights, 179.

Coteledin, made sultan of Mosul, i. 71.

Cotoner, (Raphael) distinguishes himself in a sea fight, v. 124. is chosen grand master, 146. set ds the gallies of the order to the affishance of the Ven sians in the isle of Candia, 147. marks of his esteem for brother Paul, a serving brother, 149. and of his pious liberality, ibid. dies, his character and epitaph, Cotoner, (Nicholas) brother of Raphael, is chosen grand master, v. 151. Lewis XIV. demands of him the alfistance of the gallies of the order, 152. procures the grand priory of Crato in Portugal to be restored to the order, 153. fortisies the isle of Malta, after the taking of Candia, ibid. takes measures for getting up a considerable succession in Poland, 161. sends assistance to the viceroy of Sicily ibid. settles a fund for the maintenance of the fortress of Riccasoli, ibid. enters into the designs of the king of Poland, ibid. resuses to take part in the wars of the Christians, 162, his death, his character and epitaph, 164.

Coucy, (the fire de) one of the principal lords in the French army. ii. 176. gains fome advantages over the Turks, 180, et feq. is made prisoner at the castle of Nicopoli, 182.

Council of Nazareth, where Alexander III. is acknowledged, and the antipope Victor is excommunicated, vol. i. page 103.

Council third of the Lateran, called by Alexander III. for the defence of the holy land, i. 137. the prelates of Palestine assist there, and renew their complaints against the privileges of the hospitaliers and templars, ibid. a regulation made on that subject, 138. and a decree in favours of leprous persons, 139.

Council fourth of the Lateran, called by Innocent III. in which it is unanimously agreed on to form a crusade, i. 233.

Council of Lyons, called by Innocent IV. for the deliverance of the holy land, i. 290. Gregory X. calls another for the same purpose, 318.

Council of Vienne in Dauphiny, where the order of the templars is declared extinct, ii. 18.

Council of Pisa, ii. 218.

Council of Constance, called by John XXII. ii. 227.

what passed there, ibid. et seq.

Gourtenay, (Jocelin I. de) succeeds his kinsman Baldwin II. in the county of Edessa, i. 41. is taken prisoner by Balac a Turcoman prince, 50. escapes out of prison, and gains a complete victory over Balac, whom he kills with his own hand, 53, et seq. an elogium of his valour, 71.

Courtenay, (Jocelin II. de) fon of Jocelin I. loses a part of his dominions by his effeminacy, i. 71. is taken prisoner by the sultan of Iconium, and dies in prison.

70.

Courtenay, (Peter de) a prince of the blood royal of France, succeeds to the empire of Constantinople, i. 270. is treacherously arrested by Theodore Comnenus, who puts him to death, 271. is succeeded by Robert his second son, in prejudice of the eldest, ibid.

Courtenay, (Robert de) succeeds his father, in prejudice of Philip his elder brother, i. 271. the enemies which he has to engage, ibid. his passion for a young lady occasions his death, 280.

Courte-

Courtenay, (Baldwin de) fucceeds his father Robert at the age of ten years, under the regency of John de Brienne, vol. i. page 280. traverses the different kingdoms of chistendom to implore allistance, 281.

Crato, (the grand priory of) in Portugal, a difference that arose concerning it, is wisely terminated by the grand master de l'Isle Adam, iii. 276.

Crocodile, or serpent, a huge one slain by Dieudonné de Gozon, ii. 116. a description of its head, 118. a monster like it slain by the Roman legions in Africa, 119. the proof of these facts, ibid.

Cross, a red one on the right shoulder, ordered by the council of Clermont, to distinguish the crusades, i.

21.

Cross, a red one over the heart, added by Eugenius III.

to the habit of the templars, i. 57.

Cross of white linen cloth with eight points, fixed above the regular habit of the hospitallers, over the heart, i. 38.

Cross, the true one, carried to battle, i. 163. taken at the battle of Tiberius, ibid. detained by Melic-el-camel fultan of Egypt, contrary to treaty, 247.

Crusade, (the first) projected by Peter the Hermit, i. 17. and resolved on in the councils of Placentia and Clermont, 21. the different motives by which the crusaders were animated, 22. the names of the principal persons concerned in it, 23. what hindered several princes from joining them, 24. their general meeting, ibid. the review of all the troops in the plains of Constantinople, 27. they beliege and take Nice, 29. are betrayed by Alexis Comnenus, 30. make a league with the calif of Egypt, 31. Subdue Natolia and Cilicia, ibid. take Antioch by means of intelligence obtained by Bohemund, 32. arrive in a pretty small number at Jerusalem, and form the fiege of it, 33. gain the place, and make a great flaughter, 25. immediately show the most christian fentiments, ibid. give the lovereignty of that place to Godfrey, who refules the title of king, 35, the greatest part of them return into Europe, 38. Gru-

Grusade, (the second) solicited by Baldwin III. vol. i. Fage 72. Lewis VII demands the publication of it from pope Eugenius, iii. 73. St. Bernard preaches it up by order of the pope; the success of his exhortations, 76, et seq. two hundred thousand men and upwards perish in it, 77.

Crusade, (the third) solicited by Amaury, i. 127. and afterwards by Baldwin IV. 148. the unaccountable and passionate behaviour of the patriarch Heraclius, who was ordered to negotiate it, hinders its success, ibid. et seq.

Crusade, (the fourth) raised against Saladin after the battle of Tiberius, i. 175. Philip II. king of France, and Henry II. king of England, take up the cross, likeways the emperor Frederic I. 176. what hinders Spain from imitating these princes, 179. private crusades go before and besiege Acre, 182. famine and pestilence afflict the army of the besiegers, 183. Frederic arrives gloriously in Cilicia, where he dies, 185. his fon leads his army, then confiderably weakened, to Acre, ibid, the king of France arrives there also, and waits for Richard the son of Henry king of England, in order to begin the affault, 188. the latter repairs thither after the conquest of the isle of Cyprus, 189. jealouly arises between the French and English, 191. the place, after a siege of three years, capitulates, 192. Richard takes Jaffa and Afcalon, makes a truce with the infidels, and returns into Europe, where the king of France was arrived long before, 192, et feq.

Crusade, (the fifth) published by Celestine III. notwithstanding the truce concluded by Richard king of England, i. 195. is composed almost wholly of Germains, ibid. its consequences, ibid.

Crusade, (the fixth) formed by the discourse of Fulk curate of Neuilly, i. 208. the crusaders agree with the Venetians to be by them transported into Syria, ibid. take Zara in Dalmatia, according to their agreement with the Venetians, 210. re-establish Isaac Angelus, Angelus, by taking Conftantinople, vol. i. page 212. feize a fecond time on the traitor Murzulphle, 215. and chuie Baldwin count of Flanders for emperor, 21%.

Crusade, (the seventh) solicited by John de Brienne at his coming to the crown, i. 227. and resolved on at the fourth council of the Lateran under Innocent III. 233. the names of the principal crusaders, 224, who, in concert with the king of Jerusalem, besiege Damiata, 242. a new reinforcement arrives from Italy, having at its head cardinal Albano the pope's legate, 244. the insidels make advantageous proposals, which the legate persuades the Christians to reject, 245, et seq. the king of Jerusalem parts from the crusaders, 246. the taking of Damiata, 247. the army advances into the middle of Egypt, is almost laid under water by the opening of the sluices of the Nile, and makes a disadvantageous truce, ibid. is dispersed, ibid.

Crusade, (the eighth) resolved on at the first council of Lyons, called by Innocent IV. i. 290. Lewis IX. is the chief of it, ibid.

Crufade, (the ninth) refolved on at the second council of Lyons, i. 318. the names of the principal crusaders, 3:9.

Crusade against the Albigenses, published by pope Innocent III. is prejudicial to that of the holy land,

i. 225.

Grusade, one published by Clement V. for the conquest of the isle of Rhodes, ii. 46. the general meeting at Brindis, 47 the crusaders arrive in the harbour of Limisso, 43. land in Rhodes, 51. are dispersed, 52.

Ciprus, (the isle of) its ficuation, and the succession of its kings, ii. 2.

D.

The Mamalukes, ii. 237. declares war against Janus de Lusignan, king of Cyprus, ibid. gains a victory over him, and takes him prisoner, 238. accepts of a ransom, and sets him at liberty, vol. ii. page 239. renews the treaty which his predecessor had made with the knights of Rhodes, but with a fraudulent view, ibid. suspends the execution of his design against Rhodes, 248. put to sea a considerable seet, and lays claim to the island, as formerly dependent on the empire of Egypt, ibid. makes an attempt upon Rhodes, but without success, 246. designs to surprise the isle of Lango, and is prevented, 247. lands a considerable seet in the island, and lays siege to the city, 251. his troops always repulsed, and retire to their ships with loss, ibid.

Damafeus besieged without success, i. 76.

Damiata besieged by the Christians, i. 243. carried by assault, 247.

Dandol, (Henry) doge of Venice, his character, i. 208. procures the transportation of the crusaders, 209. retakes Zara in Dalmatia, 210. his talents displayed at the taking of Constantinople, 213. the re-establishment of Isaac Angelus, ibid. and the election of Baldwin count of Flanders for emperor, 216.

Daps, (Ermengard) grand master, is in a very dismal situation, i. 165. his death, 193.

Daquin, (Thomas) one of the emperor's lieutenants, gives him advice of the pope's proceedings against him, i. 263.

Dardanelles, (the battle of the) v. 135. a second battle

there, 136.

Dartal, (Don Pedro) gives the city of Borgia, with its dependencies, to the hospitallers and templars, i.

Debts, private ones which the hospitallers leave at their death, how paid, ii. 10.

Decretals, falle ones, their author, i. 205. Innocent III.

prejudiced in their favours, ibid.

De la Roche-Aimand, (the commander) determines the grand master to attempt the recovery of Rhodes, iii. 259. introduces certain Rhodian merchants to the grand mafter in difguise to consult upon the undertaking, vol. iii. page 260.

grand

Denys, king of Portugal, institutes the order of Christ,

ii. 94.

Definoulins, (Roger) elected grand master of the hospitallers, i. 40. slain in battle, 159.

Didier de St. Jaille, prior of Toulouse, chosen grand master of Malta, iv. 55. dies, 63.

Dieu-donne de Cozon, delivers the isle of Rhodes from a terrible serpent, which destroyed its inhabitants, ii. 117. is deprived of the habit of the order of St. John, for having disobeyed the orders of the grand master, ibid. is restored and advanced to honours, 118. stands candidate for the office of grand master, and recommends himself in a speech to the electors, 131. is chosen to the satisfaction of the whole island of Rhodes, 132. behaves with courage and conduct in the execution of his office, ibid. results to engage in the civil wars which raged in the empire of Constantinople, 137. offers to abdicate, but is not permitted by the pope, 138. fortisses the city of Rhodes, and dies, ibid.

Dignities of the order annexed to certain languages,

iii. 14. the principal ones, ibid. et /eq.

Dignities of the order annexed to a certain number of years actual residence in the principal house of the order. ii. 111.

Dissertation on the government of the order of Malta, v. 204, et seq. on Zizim, v. 254, et seq.

Doldekuvin, a Turcoman prince, makes incursions into the territories of Antioch, i. 54.

Doria, (Andrew) commander of the emperor's fleet, takes Coron, iv. 18, et feq. and defends it the following year against the Turks, 22. commands the emperor's squadron in the expedition of Africa, 45. in concert with the grand prior Strozzi defeats the Ottoman army, 65. is made generalissimo of the christian fleet sent against Solyman, 76. what motives induced him to leave the service of France, and apply to Charles V. ibid. occasions the bad success of the league, league, vol. iv. page 78. diffuades the emperor from a second expedition into Africa, 80. receives orders to pursue Dragut, 101.

Doria, (Jannetin) nephew of Andrew, takes Dragut prisoner, and releases him four years after, at the inlicitation of the Genoese, iv. 101, 102. has a great share in the taking of Africa, 107. gives chace to Dragut, but to no purpose, 122.

Daria, (John Andrew) offers to affilt Malta, v. 15. a. gain proposes the same thing, but without success, 35. confers with the grand master at Malta, 98.

Douan Diodar, envoy from the fultan of Egypt, concludes a peace with the knights of Rhodes, iii. 46.

Dragut, chief of the cortains in Barbary, his birth and education, iv. 100. taken prioner by young Doria, 101. demanded of him by the Genoese, and sent back with prefents to Barbaroffa, 102. over-runs all the coasts of the kingdom of Naples, ibid. drives the Spaniards out of feveral towns in Africa, and forms a design of feizing upon Mehedia, 103. gets possession of it by treachery, 106. prepares against the enemies attacks, 111. deligns to fall upon their lines and is discovered, 115. is defeated, 117. sollicits Solyman to drive the knights of Mala out of Africa, 120. is pursued by Doria, and eicanes him, 122. fails to Constantinople to hasten the fitting out of the fleet designed against Tripoli, 122. returns with the Turkish fleet to Malta, 132 advises the fiege of the castle of St. Angelo, 135. prevails upon Sinan to lay fiege to the city of Malia, 136. perfuades him to agree to the conditions proposed by the governor of Tripoli, 157. lands in Malta, and ravages the country, but is forced to retire hastily to his ships, 231. is made governor of Tripoli, and fortifies the town, 239. makes the petty fovereigns in the isle of Gelves subject to the port, 242. joins the Turkish fleet before Malta with confiderable fuccours, 293. his character and abilities, ibid proposes the erecting of a new battery, but is opposed by Mustapha, 294. prevents the landing of the Sicilian feccours,

vol. iv. page 299. is forely wounded by the fall of a flone upon his head, 316. dies, 321.

Ducas, (Michael) emperor of Constantinople, dethroned by Nicephorus Botoniates, i. 18.

Ducro, grand cross of the order, one of the ring-leaders of the sedition against the grand master de la Cassicre, v. 95.

Duisson, (Godfrey of) grand master, i. 193. solicits the crusaders to march straight to Jerusalem, after the taking of Acre, ibid. negotiates the marriage of Ilabella queen of Jerusalem, with Amaury of Lusignan king of Cyprus, 195. his death, 196. why there is so little known concerning his government, ibid.

Du Mesnil, a templar, stabs the envoy from the prince of the assassing in direct opposition to public saith, i. 133. is protected by Odo de St. Amand grand mafter of the order, ibid. is forcibly carried off by the king of Jerusalem, and thrown into prison at Tyre, îbid.

Dupay, (Raimond) a gentleman of Dauphine, grand master of the hospitallers, i. 42. draws up particular statutes for his order, and at the same time renders it military, 42. divides it into three classes, 44. and seven languages, 45. offers his service to the king of Jerusalem, 47. and gives signal proofs of his courage, 50. is sent into Spain to procure the execution of the will of Alphonius the great, 68. accompanies Baldwin III. to the siege of Aicalon, and distinguishes himself there, 81. dies at a great age, his character, 101. is revered as a saint, ibid.

E

Edward II. king of England, causes the effects of the templars to be given to the hospitallers, ii. 95.

Edward VI. fon of Henry VIII. and Jane Seimour his third wife, succeeds his father, iv. 206. embraces the doctrine of the protestants, ibid. his death, Ma-Vol. V. Dd ry, ry, eldest daughter of Henry VIII. and Catharine of Arragon, succeeds him, vol. iv. page 206.

Egyptian fleet attempt to relieve Ascalon by sea, i. 82.

Egypt forely afflicted with a famine, i. 202.

Egypt, (the calif of) suffers the Christians to settle in Jerusalem, and assigns them a quarter there, i. 11. joins the crusaders against the Turcomans, 30. is chief of the sect of Aly, or the Fathimites, ibid. retakes Jerusalem from the Turcomans, and prepares himself to assign the siege of it against the crusaders, 32. besieges Jussa, 51. the luxury of his successors, 110. one of them resuses to give his bare hand to a chistian erreassistance, 113. Saladine extinguishes the whole sect of them, 125.

Egyft, (the fultan of) makes a treaty with the order, ii. 216. Daher dectares was against James king of Cycrus, 237, and defeats him, 238, causes attack Rhodes with a facet, which is obliged to retire, 246, again miscarries in the same attempt, 251, makes peace with the order, 253.

Egypt, (the fultan of) grants the Bestard de Lusignan the investiture of the kingdom of Cyprus, iii. 11. renews the treaties of peace with the order, 46. Campson Gauni makes a league with Bajazet against the order, 126. protects the Arabian princes when attacked by Emanuel king of Portugal, 128. the order takes considerable prizes from his subjects, 130. and defeats his fleet in the port of Aiazza, 135. makes a league with Ishmael king of Persia, and the grand master Caretto, against Selim, 141. who defeats him, and strips him of his dominions, ibid. the government of Egypt given to Cairbeg, ibid.

Eleanor, queen of France, appears at a review with an army of ladies, whom the carries to the holy war, i. 74. falls in love with Saladine, a converted Turk,

75.

Electors of the grand master, how they ought to be chosen, ii. 153. how they prepare themselves for the election, 244.

Emanuel,

Emanuel, king of Portugal, makes war upon Naubraderin king of Calecut, vol. iii. page 127.

Embre, a little ifland, where the Turks are defeated, ii.

Emery d' Amboise elected grand master of the order of Rhodes, iii. 123. takes leave of the king of France, and repairs to Rhodes, 124. calls a general chapter, and makes feveral regulations for the supporting of discipline, and settling a good order in the administraation of the revenue, 125, refolves to oppose the new rmament of the fultan of Egypt, which was feen in the gulph of Aiazzo, 133. fits out a fleet under the command of the chevalier Villiers de l'Isle Adam, ibid. employs the revenues annexed to his dignity, either in relieving the poor, or in making fortificati, ons at Rhodes, 136. his death, ibid.

Emirs, or Soldans, their authority, and the abuse that they make of it, i. 10, 110. Togrulbeg declares himself the chief or sultan of them, 15.

Empire, (the Roman) declines upon the death of Theodofius the Great, i. 2. the Greeks, their miserable state at the time of the commencement of the holy war, 18.

Empsfta, (the castellary of) a considerable dignity of the order of St. John, and the first in Europe next to that of the grand master, ii. 180.

England, the alteration in religions there upon the death of king Henry VIII. iv. 206. and Edward VI ibid.

Erizzo, the Venetian proveditor in the ifle of Negropont, defends it courageously against Mahomet, iii. 27. furrenders to the fultan on express of parole of the latter, who causes him to be sawn asunder, 2.

Erizzo, (Anne) daughter of the proveditor, a lady of distinguished beauty, resists the solicitations of Mahomet, who strangles her in cold blood, iii. 28.

Ermengard Daps, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, i. 165. his death, 193.

Eugenius III. causes the second crusade to be preached by St. Bernard, i. 73. Dd 2

Europe,

Europe, its state at the beginning of the holy war, vol. i. page 23, 24.

Eustiace Garnier, constable of Palestine, defeats the army of the calif of Egypt, i. 51.

F

Pabricio Caretto elected grand master of the knights of Rhodes, iii. 129. calls a general chapter, and makes fit regulations for the defence of the order, ib. enters into a league with the king of Persia against the Turks, 141. assists Gazelles, the governor of Syria, against Solyman, 143. dies, 147.

Facardia, prince of the Druft, implores the affiftance of the order, v. 104.

Tanagujia, a city of the file of Cyprus, taken by the Genorie, il. 206.

Buthimites, a dynasty of Mahometans, their original,

i. 109.

Ferdinand d'Heredia, castellan of Emposta, chosen grand master of the knights of Rhodes, ii. 158. his tamily and education, ib. 159. sent embassador to the pope by the grandmaster and council of Rhodes, 151. made prior of Catalonia, 162. appointed mediater by his holineab between the kings of France and England, 163. declared governor of Avignon and the Comte Veneislin, 165. conveys pope Gregory XI. from Avignon to Rome, 170. lays siege to Patras, 171. makes an attempt against Corinth, 171. and is taken prisoner, 172. ransomed and declares in favours of pope Clement VII 180. comes to Rhodes and takes possession of his dignity and government, ibid. his piety and care of the order, 170. his death and character, 171.

Ferdinand, king of Naples, abandons his kingdom to Charles VIII. iii. 112. enters into a league against that prince, 114.

Ferentine, a city of the compagne di Roma, where there is a famous affembly held for the deliverance of the Holy Land, i. 252.

Fieur.

Fieth en Quercy, a house of the nuns hospitallers, afterwards reunited to that of Beau-lieu, vol ii, page 14.

Fitero in Navarre (the abbot of) accompanied by one of his monks, causes the Moors raise the siege of Calatrava, i. 05.

Floren'ines, make war on pope Gregory XI. who excommunicates them, ii. 197. the bull is revoked at the request of St. Catharine of Siena, 168.

Florentines, enter into the holy league, iii. 283. drive the family of Medicis out of their territories, 287.

Fluvian (Anthony) grand master, his different dignities, ii. 233. assists the king of Cyprus, 238. and prepares to sustain the attacks of the sustains of Egypt, 239. holds a general chapter, 240. forbids the knights to go to Rome without express permission, 243. builds a magnificent infirmary at Rhodes, 244. his death, ibid.

Forcalquier (Guy count of) brings great riches into the order of the hospitallers, i. 93.

Foucher, patriarch of Jerusalem, opposed the exemptions granted by pope Anastasius IV. to the order of St. John, i. 88. takes a journey to Rome to procure the repeal of them from pope Adrian IV. 91.

France, a great many lords and gentlemen of that kingdom repair to Messina, to pass from thence to Malta, during the siege, v. 57. likeways to the isse of Candia, to the assistance of the Venetians, 156.

Franciscans (the European) are driven from the holy places by the Greek schismatics, v. 127. a method proposed by the order, to settle them there again, ibid.

Francis I. king of France, his character and pretenfions, iii. 266. taken prisoner by the emperor, ibid. guarded as a state criminal, 272. obtains his liberty, 275.

Frederick I. emperor of Germany, enters into the crusađe, i. 179. dies, 185.

Frederick II. emperor of Germany, is persuaded by pope Honorious III. to undertake the expedition into the Holy Land, i. 252. marries the princess of D d 3 Jerusalem, Jerusalem, and obliges her father to abdicate the government, vol. i. page 252. puts off his voyage for two years, 255. is excommunicated by pope Gregory IX. 256. defends his conduct in a letter to all the fovereign princes of Christendom, 257. the Roman barons take up arms in his favour, 250, he commits great ravages upon the patrimony of St. Peter, 260. arrives in the Holy Land, 261. prevails upon the hofpitallers and templars to join his army, marches to Jaffa, and restores the fortifications, 262. makes a truce with the fultan of Egypt, and returns into Italy, 265, drives the pope's generals out of most of the places they had feized during his absence, 266. fubmits to the pope and is absolved, 267. persecutes the two orders of the hospitallers and templars, ib. fends a body of German troops into Palestine against the princess Alice, who laid claim to the crown in his absence, 270. laments the miseries of Palestine in a letter to Richard earl of Cornwall. 287.

Fulk, count of Anjou, distinguished by his behaviour against the infidels, i. 54. his family and marriage, 55. returns into France, ib. comes back to Jerulalem, and marries Melesinda, the eldest daughter to king Baldwin, 59. succeeds Baldwin in the throne of Jerusalem, ib. undertakes an expedition to Antioch, 61. and secures the government to Constance, the daughter of Bohemund II. 62. killed by a fall from his horse, 70.

Fulk, incumbent of Neuilli, his advice to Richard I. king of England, i. 178. procures a new crusade, 203.

Fulk de Villaret, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, ii. 38. sollicits the pope and the king of France to assist the hospitallers in the conquest of Rhodes, 41. returns to Cyprus, and enters upon the expedition, 48. makes a descent upon the island, 51. lays siege to the town, 52. and takes it, 53. reduces the neighbouring isses to his obedience, 55. puts the town of Rhodes in a good state of defence, 56. becomes idle and luxurious, 99. is summoned by the order order to appear in council, and give an account of his administration, vol. ii. page 100 a conspiracy formed against him, 101. is deposed, and appeals to the holy fee, ii. 102. the cause heard at Avignon 104. is re-established in all the functions of his dignity. 106. abdicates his office, and dies, ibid.

CAbriel Martinengs, an excellent engineer, undertakes the defence of Rhodes in conjunction with the knights of the order, vol. iii. page 161, takes upon him the crofs, 163. his vigilance and care in defence of the town, ibid. and lotes an eye in the fervice, 205.

Gabriel d' Aramon, undertakes to divert Sinan from laying fiege to Tripoli, iv 147, arrives at the Turkish fleet, has an audience of Sinan, and finds his defign impracticable, 150 is not permitted to return 'till the fiege was ended, 151. obtains the liberty of the knights that were made prisoners in Tripoli by Sinan, 165. fails to Mal.a and acquaints the grand mafter with what had happened, 166, is falfly charged with having betrayed the order, and given up Tripoli to the infidels, 163. demands an audience, and defends himself in full council, 169. proceeds on his voyage to Constantinople, ibid, his honour vindicated in a letter from the council of Malta to the king of France, 177.

Galeran, bishop of Berytus, lays before the council of Lyons an account of the invalion of Palestine by the Coralmins, i. 159.

Galilee, almost wholly conquered by Godfrey, i. 40. Tancred is made governor of it, ibid.

Gallies, the order fits out a fixth, v. 109. and afterwards a seventh, 131.

Galleon, a magnificent one built at Amsterdam for behoof of the order, v. 104. is brought to Marseilles, 106.

Gargallo, bishop of Malta, one of the ring-leaders of the the disorders raised against the grand master de la Cassifiere, vol. v. page 91. pretends to make a judicial visitation of the hospital of the notable city, 92. the affair is referred to the pope, before whom he goes to defend his conduct, ibid. draws the Jesuits to Masta, 100.

Garnier, (Euflace) lord of Sidon and Cefaria, and conftable of Palestine, obliges the Saracens to raise the fiege of Jaffa, i. 51. attacks the garrison of Ascalon when dispersed for plunder, ibid.

Garnier, grand prior of England, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, i. 159.

Garzes (Martin) of the language of Arragon, is chosen grand master, v. 100. an idea of his government, ibid. makes a decree in favours of the Swits, 101. causes fortify Goza, ibid. his death, ibid.

Gafi, a Turcoman prince, engages with his neighbours to attack the Christians, and invade the territories of Antioch, i. 48.

Gaspard de Valier, marshal of the order of Malta, commands in Tripoli, and refuses to surrender the town to the Turks, iv. 149. prepares himself for the flege by receiving the facrament, 153. calls a council of war, 154. dispatches the commander Copier to quell the mutiny which had arose among his own foldiers, 155. is obliged by the council to submit to necessity. and offer a capitulation, 156. upon his figning the treaty makes a vifit to Sinan, and is injuriously made a prisoner and put in irons, 159. his behaviour in captivity, 160 is let at liberty and brought to Malta, is wrongfully accused and prosecuted by the grand mafter, and his destruction resolved upon, 165. et seq. his sentence, 177. his reputation vindicated, 180. restored to his liberty and honours. 239.

Gastineau, commander of Limeges, takes a considerable prize from the sultan of Egypt, iii. 131.

Gastus, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, i. 123.

Gastilusio, prince of Lestos, is attacked by Mahomet II.

and affisted by the order, vol. iii. page 19. is betrayed by the governor of Mitylene, and capitulates, 20, is beheaded notwithstanding his apostacy, 21.

Gaza, rebuilt and fortified, i. 73.

Gazan, cham of the Mogul Tartars, enters into a league with the Christians against the Saracens, ii. 21. his victories, 22. is obliged to return into Perfia, 23. sends an embassy to Rome to desire the pope's assistance. 24.

Gazelles, governor of Syria, railes an infurrection upon the death of Selim, iii. 142. is defeated by the forces of Solyman, the fuccessor to Selim, 144.

Gelves, an enterprize against that island, successful at first, but at last very fatal, by the misconduct of Lacerda, iv. 242. et seq.

Genoese, some knights of Rhodes, take part with them in their war with the Venetians, ii. 135.

Genoese, alarmed at the approach of Barbaroffa, but get rid of him by delivering up Dragut, iv. 102.

Gensefe, infult the squadron of the order; the consequences of these diputes, v. 134. the council prohibits the receiving any of them into the order, 135. the pope reconciles them to the order, 172.

Geoffroy le Rat, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, i. 200. his letter to the prior of England, complaining of the famine then raging in Palestine,

202. his death, 220.

George Trapan, a German engineer, encourages Mahoment II. to undertake the fiege of Rhodes, iii. 52. pretends to defert from the Turkish army, and is admitted into Rhodes, 57. and diligently watched by order of the grand master, 59. confesses his treachery, and is executed, 70.

George Schilling, commands the gallies of the order of St. John in the emperor's fervice against Algiers

iv. 80. his behaviour in the fiege, 85.

George Adorne, governor of the city of Malta, prepares to defend it against the Turks, iv. 137.

Gerard, the administrator of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, shut up in prison, i. 34. prevails upon the brothers brothers and fifters of the hospital to renounce the world, and take a regular habit, vol. i. page 38. erects a magnificent temple in honour of St. John the baptist, 39. dies, 41.

Gerard de Fins, named by the pope to be lieutenant general of the order of St. John, ii. 103. attacks the Turkish sleet, and gains a considerable victory, 103.

Gerland, of Poland, knight of St. John, illustrious for his valour and piety, i. 277.

Germany, (the grand bailif of) his establishments and functions, ii. 241.

Giles (the house of St.) in Provence, one of the first hospitals or commanderies of the order of St. John, i. 40.

Ghinucci, (cardinal) appointed bishop of Malta by the pope, in opposition to the emperor, iv. 15.

Gilbert d'Assait, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, i. 116. approves of king Amaury's design to invade Egypt, 117. levies troops to assist him, 117. resigns his dignity in a full chapter, 118. and retiring into England is cast away at sea, ibid.

God/rey of Bouillon, engages in the holy war, i. 28. first enters the city of Jerusalem, 34. made governor of it, after having refused the title of king, 36. defeats the army of the caliph of Egypt, ibid. forms new laws, extends his conquests, and dies, 40.

Gedfrey de Duisson, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, i. 192. procures a marriage between Amaury de Lusignan king of Cyprus, and Isabella queen of Jerusalem, 196 his death, 196.

Goletta, a fort fituated 12 miles from Tunis, befieged and taken by Charles, V. iv. 45. who keeps polieffion of it, 46.

Goletta, a fort on the coasts of Africa, taken by Selim,

v. 88.

Goza, described, iii. 265. visited by the grand master of Malta, iv 1. ravaged by the Turks, 144.

Goza, fortified anew, v. 101. the grand mafter de Vignacourt provides for its fafety, 103. is threatened. with an invasion by the Turks, and put in a posture of defence, vol. v. page 17.

Gozon, (Dieu Donne de) engages a crocodile, ii. 115. and kills it, 116. is stript of his knightly habit, but reestablished with bonour, 117. is made lieutenantgeneral of the island, 120. nominates himself grand mafter, 131. causes the command of the squadron of the league to be given to John de Biandra, 132. prevails on his order to affift the prince of Armenia. 133. complains of the commanders of the North, 134. makes profession of neutrality in the wars between the Christian princes, 135. asks leave of the pope to abdicate his dignity, 138. fortifies Rhodes, ibid dies much lamented, ibid.

Grand Master, a name given to the superiors of the hospitallers by pore Clement IV. i. 314. used as early as the twelfth century, ibid, the grand mafter is for life, and elective, i. 38.

Grand Niaster of the knights of Rhodes, a proposal to grant the nomination of him to the pope, ii. 18. can be depoted, with permission of the pope, ibid. has but one voice more than a pilier in the council, of which he is natural prefident, 112. has the nomination to several commanderies in each priory, ibid. how he ought to be chosen, 153. regulations concerning him, 179. is looked on as the most powerful Christian prince in the east.

Grand Master of the order of St. John, has the first place on the right hand of the throne, when the pope holds a council, iii. 254. other marks of diffinction granted him, ibid.

Grand Master of the order of St. John, his dignity and rank, iv. 218. is invited to the council of Trent, 261. to which he fends an ambaffador, ibid.

Grand Moster of the order, his dignity is above that of cardinal, v. 67 a discussion of his rights on occasion of the nomination of the general of the gallies. 99. the grand master Verdolle accepts of a cardinal's hat, ibid. Urban VIII. changes the form of his election motu proprio, 109. the inquisitor demands that the grand master's coach should stop on meeting his, vol. v. page 191. is wont to make the king of France a present of some birds of prey. 196.

the

Greek schimatics take from the Franciscans of Europe the keys of the holy places, v. 117. the order would have them treated as enemies, ibid.

Gregory VIII. appoints public prayers and fasts for the loss of Jerusalem, i. 175.

Gregory IX. pope, excommunicates the emperor Frederick II. ii. 256. notifies in his letters to the bishops of Apulia, ibid. forbids the emperor to cross the sea, as a member of the crusade, 261. assists John de Brienne and his rebel subjects from their oath of allegiance, 266. accepts the emperor's submission, and gives him absolution, 267. quiets the disturbances in Palestine, in favour of the emperor, 271. writes an angry letter to the knights of St. John, complaining of irregularities and abuses in the order, 275.

Gregory X. advanced to the popedom, i. 317. calls a general council at Lyons for the procuring a new crusade, 218.

Gregory XI. excommunicates the Florentines, ii. 167. revokes his bull at the folicitation of S. Catharine de Siena, 168. removes from Avignon to Rome, 169. is opposed by the magistrates, 173. his death, 174.

Gregory XII. is declared a schismatic, and deposed at the council of Pisa, ii. 219. resigns at the council of Constance, 228.

Gregory XIII. (pope) prefents to the order three candidates for the grand mastership. v. 98 to which he reunites the dignity of turcopilier, ibid. excludes the knights from that of bishop of Malta and prior of the church, 99.

Gregory XV. (pope) confirms all the privileges of the order, v. 106.

Guerin (friar) minister of Philip Augustus, and Louis VIII. his character, i. 224. Stops he progress of the sect of Amaury, 225. is chosen bishop of Senlis 230. has great share in the victory of Douvines, ibid.

Guerin,

Guerin, an hospitaller, takes pains to stop the progress of a new sect of fanaticks, vol. i. page 224. gains a victory for the king of France over the emperor Otho IV. 229. et seq. obtains considerable legacies of the French king for the defence of the Holy Land, and is named his executor, 251.

Guerin de Montaigu, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, i. 221. opposes the inroads of Solyman de Roveniden into Armenia, 223. refuses to join the army of the emperor Frederic II. unless he should decline the command, 262. his death, 268.

Guerin, chosen grand master of the order of St. John,

i. 281.

Guchia, the story of that prince, v. 117. the order embraces his party, ibid.

Guelphs and Gibbelins, factions in Italy, their original, i. 264.

Guimard, prince of Salerno, befieged by the Saracens, and delivered by the lords of Normandy, i. 25.

Guimeran (the commander) distinguishes himself at the siege of Malta, v. 19.

Guiscard (Robert) a Roman prince, duke of Calabria, ravages the Greek empire, and why, i. 18. whence that sirname was given him, 27.

Guttiere d'Ermegilde, prior of the hospitallers of Caftille, assists king Alphonsus VIII. against the Moors,

i. 223.

Guy, count of Forcalquier, bequeaths his possessions to the order of St. John, i. 93.

Guy de Blanchefort, grand prior of Auvergne, elected grand master of the order of Rhodes, 138 upon the report of mighty preparations made by the Turk, embarks with all expedition for Rhodes, though dangerously ill, 138 his death, ibid.

H.

HAcen, seignior of the assassins, his absolute power, vol. i. page 132.

Vol. V.

Hamida, fon to Moley Hacken, feizes upon the kingdom of Tunis in his father's absence, vol iv. page 9 squins a victory over him, takes him prisoner, and puts out both his eyes. 98.

Hargan, dispossesses Sannar of his dignity of sultan of Egypt, i. 1111. defeated by Noradin, and slain in batile, 112.

Hascen, an aga, defends Algiers against the emperor

Charles V. iv. 82.

Hessan, viceroy of Algiers, arrives at the Turkish camp before Malia, with a considerable body of succours, v. 16. attacks the peninsula both by sea and land, 17. is deseated, 21.

Figura, the ara of the Mahometan chronology, its original, i. 8.

Helion as Villeneuve, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, ii. 109 calls a general chapter at Montpelier, to reform the abuses which had crept into the order, 111. arrives at Rhodes, and repairs the fortistications of the island, 113. deprives Dieu-donné de Gazon for having disobeyed his orders in fighting with the leipent of Rhodes, 117. but afterwards restores him to the habit and honours, 118. sits out six gellies in the port of Rhodes to keep the sea against the insidels, by order of pope Benedick XII. 122. makes several regulations in the order, 124. dies, 120.

Henry II. king of England, engages to undertake an expedition into the Holy Land, i. 149. receives the embassadors from Palestine with respect, but declines to go thither in person, 151. takes the cross, 176.

Henry, count of Champagne, marries Isabella the widow of Conrad, and obtains a right to the kingdom of Jerusalem, i. 194. is killed by a fall from a window, 195.

Henry Dandalo, doge of Venice, furnishes the army of the ciusade with ships, to transport them to St. John d'Acre,

d'Aère, vol. i. page 208. restores the emperor Isaac Angelus to the throne of Constantinople, 212. resuses to be made emperor himself, 216.

Henry, brother to Baldwin I. made emperor of Constantinople, and polioned by the Greeks, i.

270.

Henry II. king of Cyprus, causes himself to be acknowledged and crowned king of Jerusalem, i. 327. arrives with succours in the port of Acre, ibid. privately retires to Cyprus, 323. disobliges by his management, ii. 15. is declared incapable of the government, and imprisoned, but recovers both his liberty and his crown, 17. et seq.

Henry, marquits of Hochberg, gives the hospitallers his lordship of Heitersheim, ii. 21.

Henry VIII king of England, talks of uniting the revenues of the order of St. John to the crown, and difiniffes the embaffadors of the grand mafter with diffrespect, iii. 277. gives the grand mafter a gracious reception, 280. approves the design of recovering Rhodes, and lays aside the project of sequestring the estates of the order, 282. divorces queen Catharine of Arragon, and marries Anna Bullen, iv. 28. proscribes cardinal Pool, 29. persecutes the order of Malta, 31. settles the succession, 206.

Henry II. king of France, fends Mr. de Belloy to Malta, with a letter to the grand mafter, complaining of infamous reports concerning his embaffador, and to make enquiry into the affair, iv. 176. opposes the match of the queen of England with Philip of Spain, 212.

Henry III. king of France, is authorifed by a decree of the council to nominate a Frenchman to the grand priory of Auvergne, and names Francis of Lorrain, the queen's brother, to those of France, St. Giles, and Champagne, v. 89. affures the grand made la Cassiere of his protection, 96.

Heraclius, patriarch of Jerusalem, sent into Europe to procure a crusade, vol. i. page 148. visits the pope and the emperor at Verona, 150. passes into England, and treats king Henry. II. with haughtiness and contempt, 151. returns without success, 153.
E e 2

Herrera, a Spanish knight, promotes a mutiny in the town of Tripoli, iv. 154. et feq.

Heredia (John Ferdinand d') a knight of Rhodes, a favourite of Innocent VI. and employed by him in divers negotiations, ii. 141. makes use of his authority to aggrandize himself, 146. is chosen grand master, 158. conveys Gregory XI. to Ostia, 169. assists the Venetians in taking Patras from the Turks, 171. is that prisoner, and refused to be ransomed at the expence of the order, 172. et seq. is got out of prison at the charges of his relations, and declares for Clement VII. in opposition to Urban VI. 179. bestows on the order a part of his estate, 180.

Holy Land, the respect paid to it by the ancient Christians, i. 11.

Hospitallers (nuns) their origin, i. 13. take the regular habit, and the three religious vows, 38. retire into Europe after the taking of Jerusalem by Saladin, 169, where they form different houses, 179. 217.

Hospitallers, the foundation of their house at Jerusalem, i. 14. become a regular order, 38.

Honorius III. (pope) writes to Andrew king of Hungary, and the grand master of the hospitallers, concerning the crusade, i. 235. makes the cardinal of Albans commander of the army sent into Palestine, 244. the bad consequences of that choice, 247. informed of the conduct of the hospitallers, whom he vindicates publicly, 248. assists at the assembly of Ferentino, 252. determines John de Brienne to resign in favours of Frederic II. his son-in-law, ibid. for what reasons, 253. excommunicates the count of Tripoli, and suffers the grand master of the hospitallers to do himself justice, 254.

Hugh, brother to Philip I. king of France, engages in the holy war, i. 22.

Hugh de Payens, founder of the order of templars, vol. 1. page 55, et seq.

Hugh de Forcalquier, assists Don James of Arragon in the conquest of Valentia. i. 272. 288.

Hugh, (St.) a knight of St. John, his devotion and manner of life, i. 276.

Hugh de Revel, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, i. 311. puts the order under new regulations, ibid. et seq. takes a journey to Rome to sollicit the pope for new succours, 317. dies, 320.

Hugh III. king of Cyprus, afferts his title to the throne of Jerusalem, i. 319.

Huguenots, Lewis XIII. demands the affiltance of the order to fubdue them, v. 106.

Humbert II. dauphin of Viennois, made general of the crutade by pope Clement VI. ii. 127. puts to fea with the fleet of the crutade, and contributes to the raifing the flege of Jaffa, 128. quits the enterprize and turns monk, 130.

Hungary, Amurath II. and Mahomet his fon carry their arms into it, but prove unfuccefsful in their attempt upon Belgrade, iii. 146. Solyman carries war into it, and takes Belgrade, ibid. et feq.

Huniades, fuccours the befieged in Belgrade, iii. 3. fallies out of the town, gains a confiderable victory over the Turks, and returns triumphant, 5.

T.

Acaya, the adventures of that Ottoman prince, whether true or false. vol. v. page 126.

James, (Don) king of Arragon, drives the Moors ou of Majorca and Minorca, and undertakes the con quest of Valentia, i. 271. unites it to the crown o-Arragon, 272.

James de Lusignan, regent of Cyprus, quarrels with the state of Genoa, and is taken prisoner, ii. 20%. upon the death of his nephew, gains his liberty and the crown, ibid.

Ee 3 James

James Coeur, a French merchant, concludes a peace between the fultan of Egypt and the knights of Rhodes,

vol. ii. page 252.

James de Milly, chosen grand master of the knights of Rhodes, iii. 1. re-peoples the islands that had been ravaged by the Turks, 7. supports the claim of the house of Savoy to the kingdom of Cyprus, against the pretensions of the bastard of Lusignan, 8, et seq. complies with the demands of the Venetians, and frees the town of Rhodes from a siege, 14. his death, 15.

Janizaries distinguish themselves in different affaults at the siege of Malta, v. 26. the basha Mustapha kills two of them with his own hand for having retired from the breach, 31. causes Ibrahim to be strangled, 128.

Jannetin Doria takes the corfair Dragut prisoner, iv.

Jaroquins, two Turcoman princes, make an attempt to recover Jerusalem, and are defeated, i. 80.

Jani, a Rhodian, treacheroufly feized on by the Turkish general, iii. 172.

Ibrahim, the favourite of Solyman, dispatched with an army into Egypt against Achmet, iii. 262. sends his head to the grand feignior, ibid.

Terufalem taken by the infidels, i. 11. the fultans of Egypt assign the Christians a quarter there, ibid. the callf Aaron grams a house to the French pilgrims, ibid. some merchants of Amalphi in Italy lay the first foundations of the order of the hospitallers there, 12. the Turcomans make themselves masters of it, and practife great cruelties, 16. but are driven out of it by the calif of Egypt. 22. the Christians carry the place after a fiege of fix weeks, and make great flaughter, 35. Godfrey is chosen king of it, but refules the title, 36. the place runs a great rifque under Baldwin III. 79. is turrendered by capitulation, 167, is again put into the hands of the Christians, all except the temple, 265, all the Mahometans leave the place, 282. laid waste by the Corasinins, 285. Fefuits prize, v. 99.

1 N D E X.

Jefuits drawn to Malta by the bishop Gargalia, vol. v. page 100. obliged to quit it, 122.

Tozos, they and their effects are declared to be lawful.

Imbroll, prior of the church, undertakes to write a history of the order, but does not finish it, v. 116. has a great dispute with the grand master at Rome, 123.

Innocent IV. (pope) calls a general council at Lyons, to engage the western princes to a new crusade, i. 290. recommends the preservation of the holy places in a particular manner to the hospitallers, and confers new donations upon them, 309.

Innocent VI. (pope) orders the knights of Rhodes to quit the island, and transport their convent into the continent, ii. 142. appoints a chapter to meet at Nismes or Montpelier to debate the business, 144. transfers it to Avignon, ibid. confers the best commandries of the order upon his favourite knight John Ferdinand d'Heredia, without the content of the grand master. 145.

Innecent VIII. (pope) folicits the grand master to send Zizim to Rome, iii. 102. grants the order great privileges in exchange for his person, 103 receives him graciously, and orders him to be nobly attended, 106. dies, 107.

Innocent X. confers the commandry of Parma on his fifter-in-law's nephew, the order complains of it to all the christian princes. v. 127.

Inquisition established at Malta, v. 88.

Inquisitors render themselves odious at Malta, v. 101. are supported by the popes, ibid. and appointed presidents of the commission wherein the affairs of the order are adjusted, 110. their pretensions are regulated by pope Clement XIV. 177. render themselves independent and insupportable to the order, 191. require that the grand master's coach should stop at meeting theirs, ibid. attempt to extend their jurisdiction over the infirmary; the consequences of these disputes, 192.

Interdict, its effects, vol. i. page 83.

Joachim, (Abbe) a supposed prophet, fortels the conquest of Jerusalem, i. 184. his character, 185.

Joannitz, king of the Bulgarians, takes prisoner Baldwin the first Latin emperor of Constantinople, and puts him to death, i. 270.

70hn, (St. of Jerusalem) the institution of the order, i. 38. their possessions, 39. the reformation of the order by Raimond Dapuy, 42. made military, 43. their statutes, habit, form of government, &c. 45. they offer their service to Baldwin II. king of Jerufalem, 47. fignalize their zeal in the defence of Antioch, 40. recommended to Fulk the successor of Baldwin by pope Innocent II. 60. renowned for their valour and exploits, 65. their manner of life, 94. adhere to pope Alexander III. in opposition to cardinal Octavian, 106. with difficulty consent to attend the king of Jerusalem in his expedition against Egypt, 117. disagree with the templars, 140. have a settlement at Constantinople, 143. such as were found there inhumanly murdered by the Greeks, 144. their behaviour at the fiege of Acre, 186. take up their refidence at Acre, upon the recovery of the town, 193. their power, 203. quarrel with the templars, 204, their difference made up by pope Innocent, 205. have foundations in all the dominions of Asia and Europe, 217. are allowed fortresses in the kingdom of Armenia, 223. unjustly calumniated, as converting to their private use the sums sent out of Europe, 248. have large revenues conferred upon them by the king of Arragon, 273. offer to redeem their captive brethren from the hands of the Saracens, 294. but without fuccefs, ibid. compared to the Maccabees by pope Clement IV. 314. obliged to quit the holy land, 331. retire to Limisso in Cyprus, ii. 2. fortify the town, 8. grow formidable at sea, ibid. once more recover Jerusalem, 23. but are again obliged to quit it, 24. resolve to abandon Cyprus, and repair to Rhodes, 37. apply to the king of France for assistance, 46. make a descent upon the island, and lay fiege to Rhodes, vol. ii. page 51. take the town. and are called the knights of Rhodes, 53. are invested with the estates of the templars, 81, et seg. fink into luxury, 99. a schism formed amongst them upon the deposition of Fulk de Villaret their grand master, 101. the pope fends a commissioner to Rhodes to enquire into the quarrel, 103. their negligence complained of to the pope, 121. their enemies endeayour to get the revenues of the templars out of their hands, 140. a chapter held at Avignon, 144. various regulations made relating to discipline, 145. enemies arise from among their own members, 157. they defeat the naval forces of the fultan of Egypt, 247. ravage the coasts of the Turkish dominions, and fecure their own, iii. 5. divided amongst themselves, 14. assist the Venetians against Mahomet, 26, 29. behave with resolution and courage in the siege of Rhodes, 61. oppressed by pope Alexander VI. 115. are victorious over the ships of the sultan of Egypt, 130. devote their prizes to the common good of the order, 135, invited to the council of Lateran by pope Julius II. who offers to put the council under their protection, 137. decline making any confiderable detachment, but order their procurator-general in Italy to attend upon his business, ibid. interest themfelves in the defence of Belgrade, 147. obliged to quit Rhodes, 230. are assigned Viterbo for their refidence by pope Clement VII. 254. their revenues in Italy feized on by the order of the emperor, 272. obtain the grant of Tripoli, Malta and Goza, from the emperor, at the request of pope Clement VIII. 297. they are put in possession of them by six commissioners, 301. are transported into the island of Malta, 305. take the name of the knights of Malta, 303. make an attempt against Modon, iv. 4. return with a considerable booty, 12. join the emperor's fleets, and lay siege to Coron, 19. a quarrel arises among them, which makes them take arms against one another, 25. the authors of the tumult punished, 28. they attend the emperor in his expedition against Barbaroffa.

barossa, vol.iv. page 43. are complimented by his imperial majesty, 54. their exploits at sea, 56. they defend Tripoli against Airadin, 59. raze the tower of the Aleavd, 61. are unsuccessful before Sufa, 72. behave with courage in the fiege of Algiers, 84. are instrumental in the conquest of Afric, 117. the ashes of such as were flain in the fiege transported into Sicily, 119. are attacked in Malta by the Turkish sleet, 132, et seq. are mutinous in Tripoli, 153. but upon Sinan's breach of faith resolve to defend the place to the last extremity, 163. being deferted by their foldiers, are taken, stripped, and laid in irons, 164. the knights at Malia improve the fortifications of the island, 190. are put in possession of their estates in England by order of queen Mary, 213. are offered Mehedia for a place of residence by the emperor, 219 determine to continue at Malta, 223. susser much loss in their harbour by a storm, 229. their bravery at sea, 258. resolve to lose their lives rather than Malta, v. 3. are fuccessful against the Algerine succours, 21. but with the lois of a considerable number of men, 22.

John, count de Brienne, proposed by the emperor as a match for the queen of Jerusalem, i. 219. lands at the port of Acre with only three hundred men, and marries the queen, 226. lays siege to Damiata, 243. and carries it, 246. makes peace with the Saracens, 247. is obliged to abdicate the kingdom of Jerusalem in favour of the emperor Frederic II. 252. is placed at the head of the pope's army against the emperor, 263. quits the command, 266. is made regent and protector of the empire of Constantinople,

280.

John de Villiers, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, i. 324. defends St. John d'Acre against the Saracens, 229. is obliged to quit the place, and escapes to Cyprus, 331. sends a general summons to the hospitallers in Europe to repair to Limisso, ii. 2. calls a general chapter, 6. makes new regulations in the order, 10. dies, 17.

John

John XXII. (pope) the manner of his election, vol. ii.

page 110.

John le Meingre, marshal of Boucicault, sits out a fleet against the king of Cyprus, and lands at Rhodes, ii. 207. is diverted from his enterprize by the grand master, ibid. turns his arms against the Turks, and lays siege to Scandaroon, 208. enters into a league with the lord of the country, reimbarks his troops, and sets sail for Cyprus, 210. comes to an agreement with the king, by the mediation of the grand master of Rhodes, 211. ravages the coasts of the Saracens, in conjunction with the grand master, 214. returns to Italy, 215.

John XXIII. (pope) his character and advancement to the popedoin, ii. 224. calls the council at Conflance, 225. his misbehaviour towards the knights of Rhodes, ibid. depoted by the council, 227.

John de Lastic, elected grand master of the knights of Rhodes, ii. 244. has advice of the sultan of Egypt's designs against Rhodes, with the concurrence of Amurath II. emperor of the Turks, 245. courts the alliance of Amurath, 246. defends the isle of Rhodes with vigilance against the invasions of the Saracens, 249. obtains recruits from Europe for the defence of the island against the sultan of Fgypt, 252. calls a general chapter at Rhodes, ibid. makes a peace with the sultan, ibid. is charged with mismanagement by pope Nicholas V. and vindicates himself with resolution and spirit, 253. is invested with sovereign authority, and the entire disposal of the revenue of the order, 255. his death, 266.

John Baptista Ursini, prior of Rome, elected grand master of the knights of Rhodes, iii. 24 provides against the invasions of Mahomet II. ibid. refuses to comply with the treaty proposed to the order by the Venetians, 26. but notwithstanding sends a quadron of gallies to their assistance in the invasion of Negrepont, ibid. favours the embassy of Ussum Cassan king of Persia, 31. makes new fortistications for the defence

defence of Rhodes against the Turks, vol. iii. page

25. his death, 36.

John d'Omedes, chosen grand master of Malta, iv. 64. fits out a fleet for the fiege of Susa, 72. sends an embaffador to the emperor to defire the demolition of Tripoli, unless refortified by his highness, 75. assists the emperor in his defign upon Africa, 80. again folicits to abandon Tripoli, but without success, 90. joins the emperor's fleet with the gallies of the order, against the inclination of several commanders in the council, 125. is negligent in making the necessary preparations against the armament of the grand seignior, 129. engages d'Aramon, the French emballador, to endeavour to hinder the siege of Tripoli, 147. expresses his grief for the loss of Tripoli, and privately charges the French embassador with having betrayed the order, 167, et feq. plots the destruction of the marshal de Valier, 170. causes letters to be wrote into several parts of Europe to the prejudice of the marshal de Valier and the French knights. 173, is displeated with the sentence against de Valier, 174. receives a letter from the king of France concerning his embassador, which he lays before the council, 177, endeavours to remove the grand prior of Capua from Malta, 189. engages him in an enterprize against Zoara, 193. writes a letter of acknowledgment to the queen of England for the kindness she had shewn to the order, 214. his death. ibid.

John de la Valette, chosen grand master of Malta, iv. 235. demands the responsions and taxes due from the Bohemian knights, who promise to pay them, ibid. requires the same responsions from the Venetians, and obtains them. 238. restores the marshal de Valie: to his honours, and farther confers upon him the title of bailif of Lango, as a testimony of his innocence. 239. enters into a design of recovering Tripoli, ibid. joins the forces of the order with the seet of the king of Spain, and sends them upon the expedition, 241. will not suffer the knights to attempt the conquest of the isle of Gelves, vol. iv. page 242. receives advice that the viceroy of Sicily had taken the island, and was building a fort, whilst the fleet was infected with a dangerous fickness, 249, recalls the knights whom he had fent with him, and foon after sends a reinforcement of fresh troops, 250. builds new gallies at his own expence, 258, is invited to the council of Trent, and fends his embassador thither in his stead, 261. follicits the council to confirm the immunities of the order, but without effect. through the interpolition of pope Pius IV. 262. has advice from Constantinople of Solyman's preparations to attack Malta, 274, et feq. makes ready for his defence, 275. his character, 276. prepares for the engagement by acts of piety and devotion, 278. the state of the island, and the disposition of his forces, 281. the chief security of the island lay in his presence, 284. offers to throw himself into the fort St. Elmo, which was first besieged by the Turks, but is opposed by the council, 290. solicits the viceroy of Sicily to make haste with his succours, 202. assists the knights blocked up in fort St. Elmo to hold out the place as long as possible, 298. writes to them with an air of indifference, as provoked them to continue their defence at all hazards, 308. fires upon the Turks from the castle St. Angelo, as they were engaged in the attack of fort St. Elmo, 212. again follicits the succours from Sicily, but with no better success than before, 317. diffembles his concern for the loss of fort St. Elmo, and exhorts his knights to follow the example of their brethren, who had died in the service, v. 2. makes new regulations for the defence of Malta, 3. orders all the Turks that should be taken to be put to the fword, 3. refuses to enter into a negotiation with the basha, 4. receives a small body of fuccours from Sicily, 5. defeats the basha's project of cutting off their communication with the fea, 11. forms a new kind of bridge, by the advice of Bosio a young knight, for the conveyance of succours from the town to the fort St. Michael, 13. again folicits the supplies from Sicily, ibid. is deluded by the VOL. V. Ff king king of Spain, vol. v. page 15. his behaviour upon the death of his nephew, 27. fets fire to the new bridge of the basha, and burns it to ashes, 23. writes again to the viceroy of Sicily for succours, 34. does not depend upon his promises, but continues his vigilance and encouragement of the foldiers to hold out to the last extremity, 37. advancing too far against the enemy, is dangerously wounded, 42. draws the wounded knights out of the infirmary to place them in posts, which required their presence, 45. is advised by the council to blow up the remains of fort St. Michael, and rejects the proposition with indignation and horror, 48. receives the Sicilian fuccours, 56. ruins the works, and fills up the trenches of the Turks, upon their quitting the island, 58. entertains the generals of the auxiliary troops, 66. refuses to be made a cardinal, 67, refortifies the island, 69, quarrels with the pope, 75. dies, 76. his funeral, 78.

Joubert, an hospitaller, attends king Fulk in his expedition to Antioch, i. 61. dispatched to Raimond count of Poitiers, with the offer of a marriage with Conftance, and the principality of Antioch, 63. made grand master of the hospital of St. John, 127. and appointed regent during the absence of the king of Jerusalem, 129. hardly escapes being taken by the enemy, 136. his death, 140.

Isaac Angelus, emperor of Constantinople, deprived of his crown by his brother, i. 211. restored to his throne, 212. dies of grief, 214.

Ismael, king of Persia, invaded by Selim, enters into a league with Campson Gauri sultan of Egypt, and the grand master of Rhodes, iii. 141.

Juliac, (Robert de) chosen grand master, ii. 153. obeys the orders of the pope concerning the defence of Smyrna, 155. demands assistance of the pope against Amurath I. 156. his complaints to the pope against some priors, 157. his death and character, 158.

Julio de Medicis, (cardinal) and knight of Rhodes, a a candidate for the popedom, iii. 249. his birth, education

ducation and power, under the pontificate of Leo X. vol.iii.page 250. is chosen pope, and takes the name of Clement VII. 252. assigns Viterbo for the residence of the knights of Rhodes, 254. enters into a league with the king of England and the Venetians to maintain the liberty of Italy, 265. is besieged in Rome, and takes refuge in the castle of St. Angelo, 286. recommends the interests of the order of St. John to the emperor, 298. nominates cardinal Ghinucci for the bishoprick of Malta, iv. 15. dies, 17.

Julius II. (pope) calls a council at Rome, to which he invites the knights of Rhodes, who beg to be excused, but offers him their services, iii. 137.

L

LA Cerda, viceroy of Sicily, forms a project for the recovery of Tripoli, iv. 240. fets out in the expedition, and is joined by the knights of Malta, 241. proposes the conquest of the isle of Gelves, but cannot obtain the grand master's consent, 242. lands to take in fresh water, but is always opposed by the inhabitants of Gelves, 245. rejects the motion of reducing Tripoli, lands in the ifle of Gelves, and finds no opposition, 246. receives the keys of the castle from the governor, and engages him to pay tribute to the king of Spain, 248. relolves to build a fort in the island, ibid. is deaf to all entreaties to the contrary, and goes on with his work, 250. is attacked by the Turkish sleet, and in a terrible consternation advises with Doria what step he should take, 251. deferts the island, and lands in Sicily, 253.

Lascaris, a Greek officer, revolts from the Turks to the Christians, v. 8. his birth and education, 9. acquaints the grand master with the basha's project to cut off all communication with the sea from the Mal-tele, 10.

Laftic, (John dε) grand master, ii. 244. prepares to wage war with the sultan of Egypt, 245. raises new fortifications in the city of Rhodes, 248. summons

Ff2 all

all the knights thither by a general citation, vol. ii.p. 249. follicits the affiltance of the christian princes of Europe, but without success, ibid. suffers the chevalier Quirini to treat with the sultan of Egypt, 250. gives the pope an account of the advantages gained by his order, 252. holds a general chapter, ibid. justifies his order to pope Nicholas V. 254. is entrusted with the sovereign power, and entire disposal of the sinances, 255. renews the treaties with Mahomet II. then come to the empire, 281. replies with courage to the summons made him by the latter, to acknowledge him for his sovereign, 265. has recourse to the christian princes, especially to Charles VII. king of France, 266. dies, ibid.

Lateran, (the third general council of) censures the behaviour of the hospitallers and templars, i. 137. makes a constitution in favour of Lepers, 138. the fourth general council, 233.

Les Strozzi prior of Capua, made general of the gallies of the knights of Malta, iv. 64. his atchievments in arms, 65. fets out from Malta for Italy to procure the liberty of his father, 67. leaves the service of France, and asks leave to enter the port of Malta, 185. the bad treatment he receives from the grand master d'Omedes, ibid. et seg. returns to Malta, 189. advises the further fortification of the island, and assists in the doing it, 191. engages in an enterprize against Zoara, 193. his army enter the town by furprize, and fall to plunder, 196. are surrounded by the forces of the aga Morat, and in great measure cut to pieces, 197. is disabled by a musket shot in his thigh, 199. is carried fafe to his ships by a knight of Majorca, named Torcillas, ib. returns with the shatter'd remains of his troops to Malta, 204. fets fail again and fpends the fummer in scouring the Mediteranean up to the mouth of the Nile, 205. carries his prizes into the ports of the order, ibid. is a candidate for the dignity of grand master, 215. sets sail to attack the corfairs, which had appeared before Palermo, 223. determines to enter again into the service of France, and

I'N DEX.

and command the French army in Italy, vol. iv. page 224. finds himself suspected by the viceroy of Sicily, ibid. escapes from him by stratagem, 225. forms a design to seize Scarlino, and is killed by a musket ball, 226. his character, 227.

Leonard Baleftrim, the Latin metropolitan of Rhodes, retires to Candia with his clergy, upon the conquest of the island by Solyman, iii. 235.

Livron, feizes upon the kingdom of Armenia, and takes the prince of Antioch priloner, i. 200. follicits pope Innocent III. in favour of Rupin's claim to the principality of Antioch, 222.

Lorgue, (Nicholas) grand master, i. 320. endeavours to extinguish the differences between his order and that of the templars, ibid. gocs into the west to implore succours, 323. dies in a short time after his return from his voyage, in which he had been unsuccessful, 324. regulations made under his government, ibid.

Lothair, (cardinal) advanced to the popedom under the title of Innocent III. i. 204. reconciles the differences between the knights hospitallers and templars, 206. represents in his letters to the bishops of France the miserable state of the christians in the east, 221. preaches up a new crusade, and annexes indulgencies to it, 225. calls the fourth council of Lateran, and recommends to them the recovery of the holy land, 233.

Louis VII. king of France, refolves upon an expedition to the holy land, i. 72. but returns without fuccels, 77.

Louis IX. king of France, takes up the cross, i. 293. enters upon the expedition, 296. passes the winter in the isle of Cyprus, 297. composes the differences between Hayton, king of Armenia, and Bohemund V. prince of Antioch, 293. refuses to come to an accommodation with the sultan of Egypt, ibid. arrives before Damiata, 299. marches against the insidels, 301. is taken prisoner, 306. recovers his liberty, ibid. sets out from Egypt to St. John d'Acre, ibid.

Ff3 the

the seignior of the assalins demands presents of him, vol. i. page 307. but afterwards implores his protection, 308.

Lussnan, (Guy de) marries the king of Jerusalem's fister, and is declared regent of the kingdom, i. 144. obliged to resign his regency, 147. retires to Ascalon, 148. is content with the title of count of Jassa, ibid. is proclaimed king of Jerusalem, 155. is deposed and divorced from his queen, ibid. is married again and crowned, 156. is taken prisoner by Saladine, 163. renounces the title of king of Jerusalem, and is set at liberty, 171. makes head against the insidels, 182. marries the princes of Cyprus, and is settled in the government of the island by Richard I. king of England, 194. dies, 195.

Lusignan, (Amaury de) king of Cyprus, marries Isabella queen of Jerusalem, i. 195. prevail'd on by pope Innocent to continue his residence in the holy land, 207. represses the seditions in Cyprus, 208. dies, 219.

Lusignan, (Hugh de) succeeds his father Amaury in the kingdom of Cyprus, i. 219.

Lusignan. (Godfrey de) arrives in the east with a fresh body of troops, i. 182.

M

MAhazin, son to sultan Sannar, defends Pelusium against the king of Jerusalem, vol. i. page 119.

Mahomet, his birth and rise, i. 4. his methods of sounding a new religion, ibid. his success and death, 9.

Mahomet II. his character and advancement to the throne, ii. 261. lays fiege to Constantinople and takes it, 262. falls in love with Irene, a Greek lady, 263. cuts off her head with his own hand, 265. declares war against the knights of Rhodes, ibid. vows their destruction, iii. 2. lays siege to Belgrade, 3. is beaten and wounded, 4. puts to sea a strong sleet, with directions to destroy all the isles of the order of Rhodes with sire and sword, 5. his admiral lays siege to a fortified castle in the isle of Lango, and is unsuccessful, vol. iii. page 6. lands in Rhodes and several other islands of the order, commits great ravages and reimbarks with his troops, 7. affilts the usurper of Cyprus in opposition to queen Charlotte, 11. threatens Rhodes with a fiege, 12. refules a fafe conduct to the commander de Saconny, embassador from the knights of Rhodes, 15. admits of an embaffy, and figns a truce for two years, 16. lays fiege to Trebilond, 17. takes it by capitulation, and puts the Greek prince who defended it to death, 12. proposes the conquelt of Lesbos, is made mafter of Mitvlene by capitulation, and breaks his faith, 21. fends out a fleet with orders to make a descent upon the isle of Rhodes, but without success, 25. fits out a fleet and invests the town and isle of Negrepont, ibid. makes himself master of the place, and treats the vanquished with all possible inhumanity and cruelty. 28. menaces the order of Rhodes, 29. marches in person against Ussum-Cassan, king of Persia, 32. gains a victory over him, 33. proposes to make a treaty of peace with the grand master of Rhodes, 42. grants a suspension of arms, 46. declares his design of attacking the ifle of Rhodes, 51. is confirmed in this defign by the grand vizier and three famous renegadoes, ibid. fends the basha to take a view of the place, 52. who attacks the fortress of Fano, but is obliged to retire, 53. his fleet are feen off from Rhodes, 55. they land in the island, and require the town to furrender, ibid. upon refusal they lay siege to it, 56. the fiege raised, 74. prepares to attack it in person, but is carried off by a fit of the cholic, before he could enter upon the expedition, 77.

Malta, its description, iii. 263. 306. 307. fortified by the grand master, iv. 13. 279.

Manualukes, the original of their institution, i. 294.

Manuel Comnenus, the Greek emperor, joins with Amaury king of Jerusalem in his design against Egypt,
i. 115. makes considerable remittances to the grand master of the hospitallers, 118. his sleet dispersed by a storm, vol. i. page 122. favours the Latin christians, 143.

Martel, (the house of) called the hospital of the true cross, founded, ii. 20.

Martin V. unanimously elected by the council of Conftance, ii. 230. puts an end to the schism, which had fo long prevailed in the Roman church, ibid.

Mary, eldest daughter to queen Isabel and Conrad, marquess of Montferrat, is acknowledged heiress of the crown of Ierusalem, i. 219, the count de Brienne is nominated for her husband, ibid.

Mary, queen of England, fends an envoy to the grand master, with advice that she had resolved to restore all the commandries to the order, which her father and brother had taken away, iv. 205. her advancement to the throne of England, 209, fought in marriage by feveral pretenders, 210. married to Philip of Austria, the emperor's fon, 213.

Maurice de Pugnac, forms a conspiracy against Fulk de Villaret, grand master of the order of St. John, ii. 100. causes him to be deposed, and himself to be elected in his stead, 102. the pope interposes in the affair, and the cause is heard at Avignon, 105. dies before the cause was decided. 106.

Mehedia, formerly named Adrumetum, described, iv.

103.

Melech-Sais, succeeds Bendocdar in the throne, ii. 320. takes Margat, 322. is murdered by one of his emirs, who takes possession of the crown by the name of Melec-Meffor, ibid.

Melefinda, eldest daughter to Baldwin II. king of Jerufalem, marries Fulk count of Anjou, i. 59. Iays claim to the kingdom after his death in her own right, 70.

Melier, an apostate templar, made king of Armenia, and joins his forces with Saladine's, i. 129. retires to the mountains, 130. is dispatched by the grandees of the country, 142.

Mercati, (Gerard) a knight of the order of St. John, his manner of life, i. 277.

Mena

Merchants, (Italian) obtain leave of the caliph Monstafer-billah for the Latin christians to visit the holy sepulchre, vol. i. page 12.

Michael Paleologui, offers to join his forces to those of the crusade, and to put on the cross himself, i. 210.

Micheli, (Henry) duke of Venice, affifts the Christians of Judæa against the Saracens, i. 52. besseges the city of Tyre, and takes it upon condition, 53.

Military friars, their feveral orders, i. 97.

Modon, its situation, iii. 294. proposed as a settlement for the knights of St. John, 295. the grand master attempts to seize upon it, iv. 4. et seq.

Moez, (the caliph) his family, i. 110.

Moley, (James de) grand master of the templars, obeys the pope's order, and repairs to him to Poitiers, ii. 39. presents two memorials to him in behalf of the order, ibid. offers to vindicate his order from the imputations laid to their charge, 74. declares himself and his order innocent upon the scassfold, 84. is burnt alive, and repeats his declaration in the midst of the slames, 85.

Moors, their conquests, i. 95.

Montferrat, (marquis de) heads a new army of the crusade into Palestine, i.208. attempts to rescue the emperor Alexis from the hands of the usurper Murzulphle, 214. is invested in the kingdom of Thessalonica, 216.

Moravia, (the count of) ravishes the regent of Hungary's wife, by the assistance of the queen his sister,

i. 237.

Morbassan, a Turk, attempts to recover Smyrna from the Christians, ii. 125. makes a cruel slaughter amount them.

mongst them, 126.

Morosini, (Thomas) chosen patriarch of Constantinople, i. 216.

Muley Hassen, king of Tunis, makes a particular alliance with the governor of Tripoli against the Turks, iv. 36. is attacked by Barbarossa, 38. obliged to quit his capital, 39. implores the assistance of Charles V. 41. is re-established, and on what conditions, 52.

asks

asks the affiltance of the order to retake Sufa, vol. iv. page 75. fets out for Naples to implore fuccours of the emperor, and is received with great magnificence by the viceroy of Naples, who is ordered to confer with him, 93 returns into Afric to oppose the rebellion of his son Hamida, is taken prisoner and deprived of both his eyes, 98.

Murzulphle, usurps the throne of Constantinople, i. 214. the princes of the crusade make war upon him, 215. flies to secure his life, ibid.

Musqueta, an old officer, makes a diversion, which draws off the Turkish army from entering at the breach they had made in the fort St. Michael, v. 32. defends the notable city against Mustapha and the Turkish army, 51.

Mustapha, son to Mahomet II. is victorious against the Persians, iii. 22. is strangled by his father's order, 25.

Mustapha, commander under Solyman at the steel of Rhodes, is thrown out of his employment, iii. 202. sent into Egypt to command there in quality of Begler-bey, 258. is besieged in grand Cairo by an army of rebellious Arabians and Egyptians, ibid.

Musulmen, their aversion to the Christians, i. 12.

N

 N^{Iece} , furrendered to the Latin christians, vol. i. page 33.

Nicholas Lorgue, see Lorgue.

Nicholas IV. (pope) refutes to affift the hospitallers with money for the recovery of the holy places, i. 323. expresses his concern for the loss of the holy land, and endeavours to draw the princes of Europe into a new crusade, ii. 3.

Nicholas Durande de Villegagnon, a knight of Malta, his birth and character, iv. 126. informs the grand mafter that the grand seignior's armament was solely defigned against the order, ibid. presses the viceroy of Sicily to send succours to Malta, 128. gives notice to the knights to prepare against the danger that threaten-threatened them, vol. iv. page 128. defends the marshal de Valiere against the prosecution of the grand master, 172.

Noradin, made fultan of Aleppo, i. 71. commits great ravages in the principality of Antioch, 78. takes the city of Paneas, and gains a victory over the king of Jerusalem, 98. restores Sannar to his dignity of sultan of Egypt, 111.

Norman lords, fettle themselves in the lower Italy,i.25. Nuns hospitallers, a monastery founded for them at Sixenne in the kingdom of Arragon, i. 181. their manner of life, jibid. had considerable houses at Florence, Pila, and Verona, 217.

o

Octavean, (cardinal) lays claim to the popedom under the title of Victor III. vol. i. page 103.

Odo de St. Amand, grand master of the templars, protects du Mesnil, i. 133. is taken prisoner by the infidels, 136. refuses to be ransomed, ibid.

Odo de Pins, chosen grand master of the order of St.

John, ii. 17.

Omadeddin Zenghi, fultan of Mosul and Aleppo, seizes upon the territories of Edessa, i. 71. is assassinated in his tent by his own servants, ibid.

Omar and Otman, the apostles and successors of Maho-

met, i. 9.

Orchanes, son and successor to Ottoman, attempts the recovery of Rhodes, i. 107. is beaten at sea, 109. his suture conquests, 140.

Ortogule, fon to Bajazet, defends Sebaste against Tamerlane, ii. 189. is taken prisoner and beheaded, 190.

Ofman, or Ottoman, the founder of the Turkish empire, resolves to drive the knights hospitallers out of the isle of Rhodes, ii. 56. the original of his family, ibid. takes whole towns and provinces from the Greeks, 59.

Otho IV. emperor of Germany, in conjunction with the other

other princes of Europe, makes war upon France, vol. i. page 227. is defeated by Philip II. 232. abdicates the empire, 233.

P

P Amiers, (the bishop of) his infolent behaviour at the French court, vol. i. page 26.

Paneas, a city of Phænicia, fack'd and burnt by fultan

Noradin, i. 98.

Parifot de la Valette, made general of the gallies of Malta, iv. 225. grows terrible to the cortains of Barbary, 227.

Paschal II. (pope) confirms the institution of the order of St. John of Jerusalem, i. 38.

Paul Simeoni, a knight of Malta, and prisoner in Tunis, seizes upon the castle, and holds it out against Barbarossa, iv. 51. gives notice to the emperor, who advances forward, and is met by Simeoni at the head of six thousand slaves, ibid. et seq. made general of the gallies of the order, and ordered to march to the siege of Susa, 71.

Peter, the hermit, forms the project of rescuing the holy land out of the hands of the infidels, i. 17. advises with Simeon the Greek patriarch about the execution of his scheme, ib. applies to pope Urban II.

10. preaches the crusade through all Europe, and with wonderful success, 20.

Petrus Blesensis, opposes the raising a tax upon the clergy for the defence of the holy land, i. 178.

Peter de Courtenay, made emperor of Constantinople, and treacherously murdered, i. 270.

Peter de Villebride, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, i. 290.

Peter de Beaujeu, grand master of the templars, elected general of the Christians in the siege of Acre, i. 327.

Peter de Cornillan, or Cormelian, elected grand master of the knights of Rhodes, ii. 139. makes new regulations in the order, ibid. his death, 144.

Peter

INBEX.

Peter Roger, cardinal de Beaufort, chosen pope, and takes the title of Gregory XI. vol. ii. page 150. refuses to accept the abdication of Raimond Berenger, grand master of the knights of Rhodes, 151. summons an assembly of the principal commanders at Avignon, 152.

Peter de Lusignan, acts the tyrant in Cyprus, and is flain by his subjects, ii. 204. et seq.

Peter Raimond Zacosta, elected grand master of the knights of Rhodes, iii. 15. raises a new fort in Rhodes, for the defence of the fort and city, 18. assists the prince of Lesbos against the Turks, 19. summons a chapter of the order to meet at Rhodes, 22. is accused to pope Nicholas V. and repairs to Rome to enter upon his vindication, ib. his death, 23.

Peter d' Aubusson, see Aubusson.

Peter du Pont, chosen grand master of Malta, iv. 32. arrives in the island, 40. sollicits the emperor to send an army into Afric to put a stop to the progress of Barbarossa, 41. the emperor resolving to march this ther in person, the grand master sits out a sleet for his assistance, 43. congratulates the emperor upon the success of his arms, and dies, 54.

Peter de Monte, chosen grand master of Malta, v. 81. his first care is to pay due honours to the funeral of his predeceffor, ibid.

Philebert de Naillac, chosen grand master of the knights of Rhodes, ii. 172. enters into a league against the Turks, 176. buys the Morea of Thomas Palæologus for the order of St. John, 185. refuses to court the favour of Tamerlane, great cham of Tartary, 195. takes a caille built upon the ruins of Halicarnassus, and fortifies it, 203. defends all the christian states in the east, and particularly the ife of Cyprus, 204. makes peace between the king of Cyprus and the Genoese, 209. ravages the coasts of the Saracens, 213. makes peace with the fultan 216. affifts at the council of Pifa, 218, and afterwards at that of Constance, 228. labours to extinguish the remains of the schism in his order, 229. succeeds in his attempt, Gg VOL. V.

vol. ii. page 232. opens a general chapter, fends the records of it to the pope, and procures his holiness's confirmation, 233. his death, ibid.

Philip II. king of France, inclined to engage in the holy war, i. 151. takes up the cross, 176. arrives at the fiege of Acre, 188. leaves Palestine, 193. is victorious against the emperor Otho IV. 229, et seg. his death, and legacies for the defence of the holy land, 251.

Philip, count of Namur, religns the dignity of emperor of Constantinople to Robert his youngest brother, i.

271.

Philip III. king of France, puts on the cross, i. 319.

Philip the fair, king of France, refules to put on the cross, ii. 5. procures the election of Bertrand de Got, archbishop of Bourdeaux, to the popedom, 30, et seq. resolves to suppress the order of templars, 62. gives private orders to feize upon the grand master and all the templars within his dominions, 64. Philip II. king of Spain, marries Mary queen of England, iv. 213. orders the viceroy of Sicily to keep a watchful eye upon Leo Strozzi the prior of Capua, 224. makes the order of Malta a present of two gallies well provided, 230. fits out a fleet for the recovery of Tripoli, 240. fends out a fleet under the command of Don Garsia de Toledo against Gomera, who takes the town in a few days, which the year before had held out against all the forces of Spain, 264, et seg. orders Don Garsia to confer with the grand mafter of Malta about the armament that was preparing in the Turkish ports, 274.

Pilgrims freely entertained in the house of St. John at Terusalem, i. 37.

Pila, a fynod, called there to determine the difference between the two contending popes Benedict XIII. and Gregory XII. ii. 218. they elect the cardinal of Milan, who takes the name of Alexander V. 219.

Pompeio Colonna, (cardinal) a candidate for the popedom, ii. 249. religns his pretensions to Julio de Me-dicis, 250.

Pompeio.

Pempeio Colonna, (commodore) advances with a finall fuccour before Malta, and returns to Sicily without landing his men, vol. v. page 16.

Portuguese and Castilians, a new language erected in their favours, iii. 15, to which the dignity of grand chancellor is annexed, ibid.

Prior of the church, a privilege demanded by the grand mafter in his favour, v. 92. cannot be chosen from amongst the knights, 99. holds the second rank in the general chapter, and affists at the conclave, 110. his differences with the bishop settled by pope innocent XII. 174.

R

R Aimond of St. Giles, count of Thoulouse, the first lord who took the cross, vol. i. page 22. is victorious in the fiege of Jerusalem, 34.

Raimond Dupuy, succeeds Gerard in the government of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, i. 42. draws up a body of statutes for the order, ib. engages the fraternity to take up arms, but upon condition to employ them only against the insidels, 43. sent into Spain, to demand the execution of king Alphonsus's will, 68. the effect of his negotiation, has the title of grand master, 69. dies, 70.

Raimond Berenger, count of Barcelona, enters into the order of the templars, i. 65.

Raimond Berenger, fon to the templar, marries the heir of the country, and is created prince of Arragon, i. 67.

Raimond, count of Antioch, defeated by fultan Nora-din, i. 79.

Raimond III. count of Tripoli, is made regent of Jerusalem, i. 134. aspires to the succession of the kingdom of Jerusalem, 145. is again constituted regent, 148. deprived of his office, 156. enters into a league with Saladin, and privately turns Mahometan, 157. is seemingly reconciled to the king of Jerusalem, ibid. betrays him, 160. dies distracted, 174.

Gg2 Rai-

Raimond, count of Tholouse, and marquis of Provence, excommunicated and deprived of his dominious, upon suspicion of favouring the Albigenses, vol.

i. page 249. takes the habit and cross of the hospitallers, ib. his death, 250.

Raimond, count of Tripoli, lays claim to the dominions of Antioch, i. 221. feizes upon feveral castles belonging to the military orders, 254. excommunicated by the pope, ibid. restores all he had usurped, ibid.

R.timond Berenger, chosen grand master of the knights of Rhodes, ii. 148, in concert with the king of Cyprus, burns the ships of the Egyptian Corsairs in the ports of Alexandria, enters the town, and carries off a considerable booty, 149, desires to abdicate his dignity. 151, causes new regulations to be made and authorised by the pope's authority, 152, his death, 253.

Rhodes, its several revolutions, ii. 50. et seq. its description and situation, 51. iii. 54. infested by a serpent, which was flain by Dieu-donné de Gozon, ii. 114, et feg. formerly called Ophiusa, from the number of serpents that inhabited it, 118. vast mischiefs wrought by a serpent in the time of Atilius Regulus, 110. the city belieged by the fultan of Egypt, 251. the flege railed, ib. the port blocked up, and the town threatened with a fiege by the Venetians, iii. 13. besieged by the Turkish basha, 56, et seg. factions railed in the town, but repressed by the conduct of the grand mafter, 70. a conference proposed by the basha to the grand master, and accepted, 72. the Turks enter the town, 72. and are repulsed by the Christians, 74. the siege raised, 76. furnished with provisions by the grand master, in expectation of a fiege by Solyman, 160, et feq. its description at the time Solyman laid fiege to it, 168. the Turkish fleet advance before it, 177. and lay siege to it, ibid. a Turkish woman and slave forms a design to fet fire to the town, 179, et seq. is discovered and oxecuted, 180. a breach made in the walls, 185. the Turks

Turks enter the town, and are repulsed, vol. iii. page 191. Christian women assist in its defence, 199. a mutiny raised in the town, &c. 217. surrendered, 227.

Richard I. king of England, undertakes an expedition to the Holy Land, i. 179. arrives in Sicily, and is promifed fuccefs by the Abbe Joachim, a pretended prophet, 184. conquers Cyprus, 190. arrives at the Christian camp before Acre, ib. makes a truce with the infidels, 193.

Richard, earl of Cornwall, arrives at Palestine in the head of a crusade, and procures an advantageous truce from the infidels, i. 282 gives a thousand pounds towards the defence of the Holy Land, 294.

Rinaldo, duke of Spoleto, impowered by the emperor Frederic II. to make up the differences between him and Pope Gregory IX. i. 261. is refused an audience, and makes war upon the pope's subjects, 262.

Robert, duke of Normandy, engages in the holy war,

i. 23.

Robert, count of Flanders, takes the cross, i. 23.

Robert, younger fon to the late emperor Peter of Constantinople, invested in the imperial dignity, i. 271. is despited by his subjects, 280. takes shipping for Italy, and dies of grief, ibid.

Robert de Juliac, vide Juliac.

Robert of Geneva, cardinal, elected pope in opposition to Urban VI. under the name of Clement VII. ii. 177.

Rodolph, emperor of Germany, takes up the cross, i.

319.

Roger, a prince of the same family, appointed guardian to Bohemund II. in the principality of Antioch, i. 48. is defeated and slain by the insidels, 49.

Roger, king of Sicily, attempts to make himself master of Antioch, i. 61.

Roger du Pins, elected grand master by the knights of Rhodes, ii. 144. is forced to connive at the pope's abuses, 147. but strives to prevent the like innovations for the future, ib. dies, 148.

Gg3 Ros

I'N DEX.

Roland, cardinal, advanced to the see of Rome, under the title of Alexander III. vol. i. page 103. his election contested, ibid. owned by the king of Jerusalem, 105. Rome governed by a magistrate, who took the title of senator, ii. 166.

Romegas, a knight of Malta, his exploits at sea, iv. 259, et seq.

Rupin, made prince of the leffer Armenia, in the room of Melier, i. 143.

Rupin, the younger, declared presumptive heir to Bohemund III. prince of Antioch, i. 222. obtains the assistance of the hospitallers by the mediation of the pope, 223.

S

Afadine, brother to Saladine, cuts off his nephews, and obtains the empire of the infidels, i. 194. proposes to prolong the truce between the infidels and the Christians, 221. his death, 243. the succession of his fons, 244.

Saladine, a Mahometan prince, bravely defends the city of Alexandria, i. 113. knighted by Humfrey de Thoron, constable of Jerusalem, 114. succeeds his uncle Siracon in the command of Noradin's troops, 124. marries the widow of Noradin, and makes war upon his fon, 126. lays fiege to the castle of Dacon in Idumea, makes an incursion into Palestine, and is obliged to retire with disgrace, 135. draws the Christians into an ambush, and cuts off the greatest part of their army, ib. over-runs the country, but is at last prevailed on to agree to a truce, 136. contrives a means of breaking the agreement, 145. comes to an open rupture, and commits great ravages in Palestine, 146. grants a new truce. 148. receives Jerusalem upon surrender, 167. befieges Tyre, but without fuccess, 170. turns his arms against the principality of Antioch, 174. his death, 194. Sao Salech, son of Camel, sultan of Egypt, refuses to accept a ransom for the captive hospitallers and templars, vol. i. page 295.

Salguez, his family held in angular veneration by the Turcomanni, i. 15.

Sachan, queen of Arragon, founds a monastery for nuns hospitallers at Sixienne, i. 180. retires thicher herself, 181.

Sanguesse, (the chevalier) appointed governor of Tripoli, iii. 301. confirmed in his employment by the grand master of Malta, iv. 2. grants a peace to the neighbouring insidels, and opens a free trade, ibid.

Sannar, caliph of Egypt, ravages the country of Judæa, i. 109. disposses of his dignity, 111. reinstated by Noradin, 112, et seq. enters into a league with the king of Jerusalem, 113. calls in Noradin to his assistance against the Christians who invaded Egypt, 121. is assistanced by order of Siracon the general of Noradin's army, 124.

Scanderbeg, fon to John Castriot king of Albania, 258. his education, ii. 258. puts a stop to the conquests of Amurath II. 259. makes himself master of Albania.

260. is victorious against Amurath, ibid.

Selim, youngest fon to Bajazet II. causes his father to be poisoned, ascends the throne, iii. 141. procures his two brothers, with their wives and children, to be strangled, ib. declares war against Ismael king of Persia, defeats him, and takes the city of Tauris, ib. advances against the sultan Gauri, and destroys the empire of the Mamelukes, ib. makes great preparations against Rhodes, 142. his death. ibid.

Sigefmund, king of Hungary, applies to the pope for fuccours against Bajazet, ii. 173. a league formed in his favours, 176. undertakes the siege of Nicopolus, 178. is defeated by the Turks, 183.

Simeon, the Greek patriarch, lays open the misery and weakness of the Grecian empire, i. 17.

Simiane, (the chevalier de) his behaviour at the fiege of Malta, death and character, v. 25.

Sinan, Solyman's general, lands the Turkish fleet in Malta, vol. iv. page 134. declines the siege of the castle of St. Angelo, but is prevailed on by Dragut to march against the town of Malta, 136. lays aside his design of besieging it, 143. bends all his endeavours against Tripoli, ibid. takes and plunders the isle of Goza, 144. sets sail from thence for Tripoli, 146. lands at Tachora, 147. fummons the garrison of Tripoli to furrender, 148. detains d'Aramon the French ambaffador, who had been fent by the grand master of Malta, to solicit him to raise the siege, 151. enters into a treaty or capitulation with the governour, 157, breaks the treaty agreed on, and uses the governor roughly, 160. becomes master of the town, 163, lays the knights in irons, who are ransomed by d'Aramon the French embassador, 164, et feg.

Siracon, chief captain to Noradin, restores Sannar to the sultanship of Egypt, i. 112. marches against Amaury king of Jerusalem, 122. causes Sannar to be assailinated in his camp, 124. dies, ibid.

Smyrna, besieged by Tamerlane, and defended by the knights of Rhodes, ii. 194. an account of the siege by Cherefeddin Ali, a contemporary historian, 197. taken, 201.

Scliman de Rovenidden, fultan of Iconium, lays waste

Armenia, i. 222.

Solyman I. eldest fon of Archanes, his conquests, ii.

Selyman II. fon to Selim, succeeds him in the throne, iii. 142. sends a strong army against Gazelles, governor of Syria, who had revolted upon the death of Selim, 143. is victorious over him, 144. determines to make war upon the knights of Rhodes, his character, ibid. lays siege to Belgrade, and takes it, 145. different opinions concerning the war with Rhodes, 146. which however is at last resolved upon, 147. his letters to Villiers de l'Isse Adam, grand master of Rhodes, 154. sends a declaration of war to the grand master, 174. comes in person to the siege of Rhodes,

Rhodes, and puts aftop to the murmurings of the janizaries, vol. iii. p. 180. carries on the fiege with vigour, 182, et seq. holds a council of war, and agrees to a general affault, 196, et feg. not meeting with fuccels. orders his general to be flain, but at length yields to the intercession of his friends, and pardons him, 202. feems resolved to raise the siege, but by a letter from d'Amaral is encouraged to continue it, 203. shuts himself up for some days in his tent, without suffering any of his officers to come near him, through veracion at his losses, 216. summons the place to surrender, with offers of advantageous conditions, 221. rejects the propolition of a truce, and fires again upon the town, 222, makes himself master of it by capitulation, 224. treats the grand mafter with respect, 228. obliges the Latin bishop to leave the island, 235. seizes upon Tunis, and is acknowledged as their fovereign, iv. 40. declares war against the Venetians, 78. succours Buda, 79. orders all the Corfairs of his dominions to submit to Dragut, after the death of Barbarossa, 102. at his solicitation, makes powerful armaments against the order, 120,et feq. list of his fleet, 125, which ravages the coast of Sicily, 131. appears off Malta, where they make fome attempts, which the valour of the chevalier de Villegagnon, and advices received, render abortive, 132, et seg. takes Goza, 144. and Tripoli, 164. vows revenge upon the knights of Malta for the defeat of his armies, and threatens to march against them in person, v. 64. turns his arms against Hungary, and ends his days at the siege of Sigeth, 69.

Sourdain, nephew to Kaimond, count of Tholouse, takes Tripoli in Syria, i. 41.

Stephen, count of Blois, takes the cross, i. 23.

Suabia, (Philip duke of) leads the German troops to the fiege of Acre, upon the death of his father the emperor Frederick, i. 185. marries Irene, fifter to Alexis Comnenus, 210.

Sueta, (the castle of) besieged by sultan Noradin, i. 99. Susa, besieged by the marquis of Terra Nova, iv. 72.

Ta-

Ameriane, great cham of Tartary, solicited by the emperor Manuel to oppose the incursions of Bajazet, vol. ii. p. 185. advances against him as he was besieging Constantinople, 187. his original, 188. attacks Sebaste, and carries it by storm, 189, et seq. comes to an engagement with Bajazet, defeats his army, and takes him prisoner, 191. the manner of his treatment, 192. makes war upon the knights of Rhodes, and lays siege to Smyrna, 195. and takes it, 201. his retirement into his own country, and death, 202.

Tancred de Hauteville, a Norman lord, settles in Italy,

i. 24.

Templars, the institution of their order, i. 56. are verey serviceable in their defence of pilgrims, ib. their behaviour at the fiege of Ascalon, 84. their manner of life, 97. suffer in their reputation by countenancing an act of Barbarity, 123. come to a milunderstanding with the hospitallers, 140. their courage at death, 163. their power, 204. disagree with the holpitallers, 205. their differences composed by pope Innocent, 206. oppose the prolongation of a truce with the infidels, 220, are in a state of war with the hospitallers, 281. call in the sultans of Damascus and Edeffa to their affiftance against the Corasmins, and are defeated, 286. attempt to redeem their captive brethren from the hands of the Saracens, but with- . out success, 294. their constancy under the persecution of Bendocdar, 299, forced to leave the holy land, 221. obtain the town of Limisso from the king of Cyrus for a place of retreat, ii. 2. charged with various crimes, 62. the utter extinction of the order, 84. their effects given to the order of the hofpitallers, 88.

Theodore, king of the leffer Armenia, enters into an alliance with the Latin princes, i. 128.

Theodorick, prior of the hospitallers of Clerkenwell in London, sets out with an army for the holy land, is 271.

Thibaud V. king of Navarre, undertakes an expedition into the Holy Land at the head of a crusade, and makes a truce with the infidels, vol. i. page 282.

Thierri, grand preceptor of the templars, writes a circular letter to the brothers of his order, after the battle of Tiberias, i. 165. gives an account of the conquest of Jerusalem by Saladine to Henry king of England, 169.

Thomas, the lawful fuccessor in the kingdom of the Armenians, is expelled the country, i. 128.

Thomas Palæologus, despote of Morea, sells his dominions to the order of St. John, ii. 185. gives back part of the price, and returns to Sparta, 186.

Thomas Bosto, nominated bishop of Malta by the emperor, and is opposed by pope Clement VIII. iv. 13. obtains a bull for his promotion of pope Paul III. 18.

Thoron, (Humph. de) constable of Jerusalem, confers the order of knighthood upon Saladine, i. 114. raifes the siege of Arach, 130.

Tiberius, besieged and carried by Saladine, i. 160.

Togrulbeg, general of the Turcomanni, his character and conquelts, i. 15.

Tripoli, described, iii. 265. besieged by the Turks, Turcomanni, conquer Palestine, and commit great ravages, i. 15.

Turcopolier, the title, whence derived, i. 160. Tyre, erected into an archbishoprick, i. 53.

. .

Vatacius, constituted emperor of the Greeks, vol. i. page 278. his power and abilities, 279.

Ubaldina, an hospital nun, her piety and virtues, i. 218. Velasquez, (Diego) defends Calatrava against the Moors, i. 96.

Vitri, (James de) bishop of Acre, to be regarded as an original historian, i. 37.

Villiers de l'Isle-Adam, commands the vessels of the order

INDEX.

der of Rhodes against the fleet of the sultan of Egypt, vol. iii. page 133. gains a victory over them, 135. elected grand malter, 148. fets out for Rhodes, and, after the danger of being destroyed by fire and tempest, lands safe at Syracuse, 150. arrives at Rhodes, 15t, et seg. answers the grand seignior's letters, 155. 157. caules repair and augment the fortifications of the city, and charges the commissaries to make the preparations necessary for a siege, 153, et seq. causes raile 500 men in Candia, 160. fortifies the city by the directions of Gabriel Martinengo, to whom he gives the cross, and a pension, 163, et seq. sollicits the affistance of the christian princes, but without success, 165, reviews his men, which are not upwards of 6000, 166. gives the charge of the principal parts of the town to his chief officers, 170, orders the knights to prepare for the fiege by fasting and prayer, 175. his vigilance in the defence, 177, et feq. supplies the foldiers with powder in an extraordinary manner, 188. drives the Turks from the breach, as they were entering the town, 191. discovers the treafon of the Jewish physician, who had settled at Rhodes as a foy for the Turks, 195. vifits all the quarters of the town, and exhorts them to a vigorous defence, 107. drives the Turks from the baltion they had feized, 201. never ftirs from the intrenchment on the Spanish bastion for four and thirty days, nor fleeps, except on a matrefs, 206. is disappointed of the fuccours he expected from the princes of Europe, 212. drives back the Turks from the town in disorder, 215. agrees to a negociation with the enemy, 220. furrenders the town upon capitulation, 244, et seq. is visited by the grand seignior, 228. quits Rhodes, 229. arrives at Candia with the diftreffed remains of the order, 233, repairs his ships and deligns for Italy, 236. notifies his purpose to the pope by an embassador, ibid. obtains a bull to oblige all the knights of the order to continue in a body under his authority, 238. arrives at Gallipoli, in the territories of Naples, ibid. and at last in the port

INDEX.

port of Messina, where he meets the poor remains of the order, vol. iii. page 239. is complimented by the viceroy of Sicily, and offered the town of Mellina for a retreat, 240. his first care is to provide for the fick and wounded, whom he attends upon in perion, ib. makes a fevere enquiry into the negligence of the knights who were employed to procure aid from Europe, ibid. calls a general affembly of the order, lays before them the pope's bull, and advises them to continue together, 244. a plague breaking out at Messina, he reimbarks with his knights, and lands his colony in the gulph of Baiæ, 245. dispatches the chevalier de Chevriere to Rome to desire an audience of the pope, 246. comes to Rome, and is kindly received by the pope, 248. upon the death of pope Adrian, entrusted with the guard of the conclave, 249. expresses his satisfaction in the election of pope Clement VII. 252. relates the story of the siege of Rhodes before the pope and cardinals in a full confiftory, and draws tears from the affembly, 253. has the first place after the pope in public processions, 254. fends an embaffy to the emperor, 256. refolves to recover Rhodes, 258. dispatches certain Rhodian merchants upon the undertaking, 260, fends the commander Bosio to Khodes to facilitate the enterprile, 261. refolves to visit the emperor in person, with a view to obtain of him the ifles of Malta and Goza, and the town of Tripoli, with the more ease for the order, 269. lays before his imperial majesty an account of the fiege and furrender of Rhodes, and obtains a promise of the isle of Malta for the settlement of the knights, 272. makes a visit to Francis I. king of France, then prisoner at Madrid, 273. acts as a mediator between the emperor and the king of France, ibid. and procures a peace, 275. takes his leave of the emperor, with fresh assurances of the island of Malta, 276. puts an end to the dispute relating to the priory of Crato, ibid. fets out for England, and is graciously received by Henry VIII. 278. returns into Italy, 283. is fenfibly afflicted at the Vol. V. Hb pope's pope's imprisonment, vol. iii. page 284. has his heart fixed upon the recovery of Rhodes, and writes to the Greek metropolitan Euthymius about the method of executing his defign, 289. calls a general chapter, and exhorts them to be unanimous in the choice of a port for the future relidence of the order. 200. follicits the pope to use his credit with the emperor for settling the order in Malta upon easier conditions than his highness demanded, 296. the emperor yields to the pope's entreaties, and grants the isles of Malta and Goza, and the town of Tripoli, as a fief-noble to the order, 298. the grand mafter carries on the correspondence of Modon, 200, procures a confirmation of the emperor's grant from the pope, 300. meets with new difficulties in relation to the exportation of corn out of Sicily, and the coining of money, 201. gets over these two articles by the pope's mediation, 305. arrives with his knights in the great port of Malta, and makes his first settlement in the castle of St. Angelo, 306. builds houses for the knights, 308. visits Goza and Tripoli, iv. 1. endeavours to surprise Modon, 4. the defign miscarries, 12. turns all his thoughts upon the fortification of Malta, 13. orders the inhabitants to take up arms, to repel the expected invasion of Barbarossa, captain of the Barbarian corfairs, 23. holds a general chapter. in which he makes divers regulations, 24, et [eq. is extremely afflicted on account of a private quarrel arisen among the knights, 25, et seq. other causes of his forrow, which occasioned his death, 28. his character, 32.

Urban V. (pope) approves of the enterprise on Alexandria, ii. 149. that pope's remarkable confession of his faith at his death, 150.

Urban VI. chosen pope by the violence of the Bannerets, ii. 175. main:ains himself in the chair by the same means, 176. a schism between him and Clement VII. elected at Fundi by the cardinals, when set at liberty, 177. fatal consequences of that division, 178, et seq.

Uffum

Ulium-Cassan, king of Persia, enters into a league with the princes of Europe against Mahomet II. vol. ii page 20, et feg. is follicited by Mahomet to abandon his new allies, 31.

William, bishop of Acre, sent into Europe to sollicit 2 new crusade, i. 127.

William, archbishop of Tyre, dispatched into the west to procure aid against the infidels, i. 175. prevails by his rhetoric, 176.

William I. count of Holland, arrives in the Holy Land with a confiderable fleet of Germans, Frieflanders and Dutch, i. 242.

William de Chateauneuf, elected grand master of the order of St. John, i. 308. his care in the discharge of his office, 309. his death, 311.

William de Villaret, chosen grand master of the order of St. John, ii. 13. gives the habit and cross of the order to feveral young ladies of quality, 20. dies, 38.

Z

Zabulon, (the bishop of) dispatched into Europe to follicit a second crusade, vol. i. page 72.

Zara, invested and taken, i. 210.

Zael, king of Valentia, furrenders the country to the king of Arragon, i. 272.

Zizim, fon to Mahomet II. upon his father's death lavs claim to the crown, iii. 77. feizes upon part of his dominions, and waits the coming up of his brother's forces to oppose him, 79. is defeated by Achmet. the general of Bajazer's army, 80. flies into Egypt, St. retires from thence, and throws himself into the protection of the Caramanian prince of Cilicia, 82. is defeated in a fecond battle, 84. hardly escapes, ibid. takes refuge in Rhodes, 87. is kindly received by the grand mafter and knights, ibid. departs thence for France, at the instance of the grand mafter, 91. arrives fafe on the coasts of Provence, 97, is refused an interview with the king of France, vol. iii. page 98. receives the news of the grand mafter's treaty with Bajazet with the highest expression of grief and passion, 99. is sent to Rome, 103. and savourably received by pope Innocent VIII. 106. the king of France interests himself in his affairs, ibid. oppressed with a new series of calamities upon Innocent's death, and imprisoned in the castle of St. Angelo, 108. poisoned by order of pope A-lexander VI. 112.

INDEX.

FINIS.

TITTELL

.....

Section Views of the Style Sec.

